WELCOME!

You hold in your hands the official first issue of a brand-new publication called The Quarterly. We really hope that you enjoy it.

Our purpose in producing this magazine is to build up, to encourage, to inform, to help you in your walk as a Christian, and even to make you smile. Lofty goals? Of course. But we're pretty confident that the staff of writers we've got are more than up to the task!

In this issue, you will get to read interviews with long-time Christians who have trained preachers, learn the sad history of the Lost Sermons of H. Leo Boles, see the power of the gospel on a drunk ferryman, get a deeper understanding of the meaning of hospitality, learn about what true inclusiveness is, how to cultivate encouraging attributes, and much, much more!

Our cover article, "What Ever Happened to Shepherding?" has been very well-received (thanks to our Preview Edition), and is very much worth the time to read. You will definitely benefit from Jamie Beller's insights on this subject.

We also want you to know about a book that you might be interested in getting for someone you know. William Howard has written a review of a book dealing with the Bible and PTSD (post-traumatic stress disorder), which has proven to be very helpful for those dealing with it.

We've got our first installment of a series of articles dealing with elders, each one written by a different author. This time, it is Richard Mansel, dealing with Elders in the Old Testament.

I could keep going about the great stuff in this issue, but it'd be easier for you to just turn the page and discover it for yourself!

Thank you for taking the time to read The Quarterly. We do ask that when you're done reading this issue, you take a moment to look at some of the books we have available, many of them listed near the back of this issue.

EDITORIAL: AN IMPORTANT NOTE

Any honest Christian will tell you that there are far too many divisions in the Lord's church. Let's not beat around the bush here—one division is too many. It saddens me that we have any "groups" or "wings" or "divisions" or whatever else you might want to call them. Unfortunately, that was the state of the church before I was born. I didn't cause it, but I still have to deal with that reality.

Over the past few years, I have been involved with a group on Facebook that is comprised of dedicated preachers and faithful men in the church. That group contains a wide array of brethren, including many fine men who are in different "groups" in the church. We have had some great discussions on the issues that have separated us. We still don't agree or endorse the positions that the others take on the issues, but at least now we have a better understanding of where each side is coming from and the opportunity for more open dialogue. It's not unity, but it's a good start.

In putting together a staff of writers for the Quarterly, I reached out to several brethren—on both sides of these divides. And I am quite thankful that some of them agreed to be involved with this endeavor to strengthen and uplift the brethren. But I need to make this perfectly, 100% clear to all the readers of the Quarterly:

Just because someone writes for the Quarterly does not mean he endorses everything that is written or advertised in its pages, or that he is pronouncing himself in 'full fellowship' with the other writers.

For example, two men are interviewed in this issue who have long been associated with Oklahoma Christian University. Their observations are very relevant, interesting, and timely; but just because they are interviewed in this issue does not mean that all the writers endorse or support O.C.U.

The writers in this issue are all good, dedicated men who love the Lord, who believe in the inspired word of God, who have obeyed the gospel plan of salvation, who insist of following the biblical pattern for worship, and who seek to follow Jesus Christ to the best of their understanding. I appreciate them all, and after reading this issue, I hope you do too.

Insights from Seasoned Ministers: Loren Gieger

Interviews by Jim Mitchell

Recently I had the opportunity to sit down with two men who have been a part of Oklahoma Christian University for decades and have had a positive impact on thousands of students over the years. Both are still very active in the Lord's work, and their insights on how things have grown and changed carried both encouragement in things which have been positive as well as concern for the challenges the Lord's church faces.

Dr. Loren Gieger served as a Professor of Biblical Studies at OC for 31 years before retiring from the University classroom. He continues to teach the Early Bird class on Wednesday evenings at the Memorial Road church of Christ in Edmond, OK – which he has done for over a quarter of a century, and he preaches for the church of Christ in Stroud, OK. Dr. Gieger is a member of the Evangelical Theological Society and the Near Eastern Archaeological Society. He has done archaeological studies in Turkey, Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, and Egypt.

What changes have you seen within the Lord's church through the years?

LG: The first change I see is a decline in numbers. Small congregations in rural areas continue to decline as smaller communities dwindle and people migrate to the cities. It seems like congregations that are doing well are the larger congregations as people become more attracted to congregations with huge numbers. The strength of the leadership within many congregations is declining as membership in general is "graying."

My second concern is with the soundness of the church. I think that younger ministers have not fought the battles a previous generation did with denominationalism. Younger ministers in general seem unaware of the dangers of the vocabulary used where there are non-Biblical terms frequently used in the religious world. Generally, as I listen to younger preachers, they don't seem to know the book or how to exegete passages properly. They endeavor to appeal to a wider diversity of members and as a result, the distinctiveness is losing ground. I do think we need to turn some of these trends around.

What things do you see happening today which are encouraging?

LG: Our preachers are more formally educated than ever before. They tend to be very sharp, eloquent and good communicators. They are much better at illustrating lessons, stories are interesting, the lessons they give include lots of examples. However, as a result of that emphasis, there is a lot less Biblical proclamation in their preaching.

There are more opportunities and ministries for local congregations which is fantastic. Visual presentations (utilizing things such as power point) make lessons interesting and memorable more than ever before. The internet gives us opportunities which are unparalleled as we can communicate with Christians and missionaries around the world. Generally speaking, members of the church are more prosperous (at least in this country). We have finer homes, but may actually use them less in Christian hospitality than previous generations. The younger generation in the Lord's church are very service oriented and take advantage of multiple mission trips, camps, and campaigns around the globe.

Within the younger generation, the commitment to the restoration of New Testament Christianity is not something which I see today as much as in the past.

What can you share from your ministry which was unusual or humorous?

LG: When I was in Fort Worth, one of the elders gave me a call late at night about the death of one of our members and told me he would come by and pick me up to go visit the family. I dressed hurriedly and slipped my shoes on (I had two pairs of shoes sitting by the couch). When we arrived at the home and rang the doorbell, one of the two elders with me said "Hey preacher, look down at your feet." I had put on one white shoe and one black shoe. I tried to hide one foot behind the couch, but finally just brought both feet and told them that I have on one black shoe and one white shoe as you can see, but that I had another pair just like it at home. When I arrived back home, the front porch light was on, and my wife had set the other white and black shoe out on the porch. Later, the congregation took up a special contribution to give me a trip to the Bible lands. They rented a banquet room and had a dinner to see me off on the trip. Every man who came to that dinner came wearing one white shoe and one black one. The story made the front page of the local paper in Fort Worth.

What concluding thoughts do you have as we bring this interview to a close?

LG: I am afraid that the restoration mindset may be fading away, and I'm not sure how to stop that from happening. I also think there are some things we have taught we need to continue to revise, we never want to get away from scripture, but there are some things that are problems in today's society that we really haven't faced as well as we should. We have taken a [prohibitive] stance in churches of Christ (you can't do this and you can't do that) but we have not taken a redemptive stance, that is, how do you handle people that are in certain situations. I think we need to take another look at how we conduct funerals. We can do a better job ministering to the family of the deceased in times of grief. I think we need to teach people how to give. I think we have converted people (even on the mission fields), but we don't teach those people to give like previous generations have given. I don't want to sound negative, but I do think that along with the positives taking place, there are problematic areas we need to continue to address.

Insights from Seasoned Ministers: Stafford North

Dr. Stafford North has been a part of Oklahoma Christian University as a teacher and administrator since 1952. Though he has stepped out of the role of full-time instructor, he is still very much involved with the university and continues to teach several classes. He has been preaching since 1948 for congregations in Oklahoma, Kansas, and Florida. Through the years, he has specialized in studies of: Evangelism, Daniel, Revelation, eschatology, church doctrine, and church leadership.

What changes have you seen in the Lord's Church in Oklahoma over the years.

SN: I moved to Oklahoma City in 1958, when Oklahoma Christian College moved to the city from Bartlesville. Back then, there were somewhere between 10 to 15 congregations in the area, and they seemed to work well together. The church has grown a lot since then. I think that's partly due to the influence of the university over the years. There have been a lot of students who have graduated and stayed in the area. Along with the positives, there are challenges we face. In 2003 we had 605 churches in Oklahoma with 63,581 members. That has since gone down to 566 churches, with 56,528 members. Things are changing where rural congregations have had a hard time continuing. There have also been studies indicating that not as many young people are staying with the church they grew up in. I think one of the things we need to work on is finding ways to help them stay faithful. As a whole, I think the relationship among the congregations here in Oklahoma has been positive. That's not true everywhere else.

In terms of some of the things going on in the church generally, there are things that have developed elsewhere that have not affected us very much in Oklahoma. I counted the other day the number of churches in the states around us - OK, NM, KS, AR, TX (those states around us) - who have started using instruments. In those states, there are 36,000 churches and 36 have gone instrumental. There are two such congregations in Oklahoma, and they have not thrived with such a decision. I think that says something about Oklahoma churches wanting to be faithful to the word and it speaks well of the churches in Oklahoma. Some churches have begun to use women in more ways in worship, but I don't know of any churches in Oklahoma where that is the case (that's not to say that no one has done so, but that I'm not aware of any), so that trend doesn't seem to be infiltrating Oklahoma churches either.

I think there are a lot of things that speak well of Oklahoma churches. The spirit is positive and we continue to be staying with what the Bible teaches about all of these things. I will say, though, that we don't seem to be evangelizing as much as we ought to. There are more and more congregations who are recognizing their need to be more evangelistic and we need to do whatever we can to help them do that. That's something at which we can all be better.

As you think over the time you've spent in the state, what strikes you as some of the most unusual or most humorous experiences you've had.

SN: Early in the history of Oklahoma Christian, back in 1955, when the college was in Bartlesville, I drove to Grove, Oklahoma to preach. It was about a 100 mile drive and I would drive over Sunday morning and drive back late Sunday night. I remember staying up late, working a musical we did titled “Songs America Sings.” It was a three act show and a big deal for the school as nearly the entire the student body (of 150 or so) was involved. After staying up late one Saturday night and driving to Grove the next morning I had, in the middle of the sermon, the kind of moment you have when you’ve been driving down the road and all of a sudden realize you’re not quite sure where you are. I had that moment during the sermon. For a moment, I didn’t know where I was and didn’t know where I was in the sermon outline. I went to sleep in my own sermon! I quickly just picked a point on the outline and started from there to finish the message. I want to be very clear that that’s the only time I’ve ever gone to sleep in my own sermon!

What makes you the most optimistic about the direction of the Lord’s church and the direction of Christian education?

SN: In the years I’ve been teaching at Oklahoma Christian, I’ve met a lot of very fine young people, who want to serve. That seems to be a characteristic of this generation and we need to capitalize on that. They go on campaigns and help with local evangelistic outreach (the Capitol Hill church of Christ is a great example of that with the medical outreach they have and the way they talk to people in line about the Gospel). The inner city work in both Oklahoma City and in Tulsa are good examples of being evangelistic in meeting the needs of others. We’ve also been blessed with a lot of great preachers here in Oklahoma throughout the years, and that has also helped strengthen the cohesion we have among the churches.

EQUIPPING

By Jim Mitchell

In Ephesians 4, after Paul listed areas of service in the first century church (4:11), he wrote that the purpose of these tasks was “for the equipping of the saints for the work of ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ,” (4:12). The sentence (as it is most often translated into English) doesn’t end until verse 16, and stresses the unity of faith and knowledge of the Son of God (4:13), the strength to overcome “the trickery of men, in the cunning craftiness of deceitful plotting” (4:14), and the growth to maturity which must take place as the body of Christ is “knit together” by “speaking the truth in love” and by “the edifying of itself in love” (4:15-16).

Before it is possible to ascertain the elements involved in “the equipping of the saints”, the scope of meanings within the term equip need to be addressed. Just what does it mean to equip the saints, after all, several other English translations use the word “perfecting” instead of “equipping”? In Matt. 4:21 and Mk. 1:19 the verb form of the word is translated “mending” as James and John along with Zeb- edee their father were mending their nets. It is used by Paul in his admonition to the Christians in Corinth that they be “perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment” (I Cor. 1:10), and to the churches in Galatia that if someone “is overtaken in any trespass, you who are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness” (Gal. 6:1). In a majority of the more than a dozen places where variations of the word are found, it is translated as “perfect” or “complete.”¹ What then is involved in “the equipping of the saints”?

James MacKnight notes that the word used in Eph. 4:12 “properly signifies to place the parts of any machine or body in their proper order, and to unite them in such a manner as to render the machine or body complete. Hence it is used to denote the reducing of a disjointed member to its due place...In the metaphorical sense... (it) signifies the fitting of a person, by proper instruction, for discharging any office or duty.”²

Taking into consideration the various uses mentioned above from which “equip” is derived, perhaps the best way to describe the “equipping of the saints” involves not only that we have a knowledge of God’s Word, but also that we have had practical training laid out in “proper order” where more advanced instruction (Heb. 5:13, 14) has followed an understanding of the foundational truths of God’s Word (I Pet. 2:1-3) with Christians growing in their ability to apply Scripture to life situations as spiritual maturity increases. Whether we are involved in topical studies of the Bible (with a variety of passages being studied in connection with a central thought or theme), a textual study (going through a thorough exposition of a book of Scripture), or a study which focuses more on practical application of Biblical principles to everyday life, the goal should ultimately be the same – “the equipping of the saints for the work of ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come to the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; that we should no longer be children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, the cunning craftiness of deceitful plotting, but, speaking the truth in love, may grow up in all things into Him who is the head – Christ” (Eph. 4:12-15).

May you have a very blessed, encouraging, edifying, and equipping Quarter!

² James MacKnight, A New Literal Translation from the Original Greek, of all the Apostolical Epistles. Vol. III (Baker Book House, 1969 – reprinted from the London edition, 1821) p.318. In commenting on the same Greek word, William Barclay wrote: “In classical Greek it has a wide variety of meanings, all of which can be gathered together under one or other of two heads. (i) It means ‘to adjust, to put in order, to restore’. Hence it is used of pacifying a city which is torn by faction; or setting a limb that has been dislocated; of developing certain parts of the body by exercise; of restoring a person to his rightful mind; of reconciling friends who have become estranged. (ii) It is used of ‘equipping or fully furnishing someone or something for some given purpose’. So it is used of fitting out a ship and it is used of an army, fully armed and equipped, and drawn up in battle-array.” William Barclay, New Testament Words (Westminster Press, 1974) p. 168, 169.

THE LOST SERMONS OF H. LEO BOLES

By Kyle Frank

This sad tale follows a brown satchel. Yes, a brown satchel. For years, H. Leo Boles served the Lord as a preacher, writer, editor, and debater. In January 1946, he came down with a bout of pneumonia to go along with the phlebitis (an inflammation of a vein) which had severely hindered his mobility. However, by February, he had recovered from the pneumonia, and was successfully overcoming the phlebitis, and was expected to make a full recovery. But early in the morning of February 7, 1946, he awoke his wife and his secretary with a horrible scream of pain. He passed from this life to the next that same morning.

After his unexpected death, his funeral was conducted by N.B. Hardeman, S.H. Hall, and B.C. Goodpasture. It was soon after this event that the brown satchel came into play, and the story of the lost sermons begins.

H. Leo Boles wrote his sermons in brief outline form, and expanded on them as he was preaching them. They were usually typewritten, and he would often write the date and location where he used the outline at the bottom of the page. After his death, his office was cleaned out, and all of his known outlines were put into his brown satchel. Mrs. Boles, in a show of appreciation to her husband's secretary, gave her this satchel.

This secretary's name was Miss Violet Devaney. She came from a very wealthy family, and had several sisters, but no brothers. Growing up, they all dreamed of getting married and having families of their own. However, their father had other ideas. He gave them an edict, that if they ever married, they would be completely taken out of the will, and would receive not even a penny of the family fortune. Perhaps he did this so that his daughters would find men who were more interested in them than in their inheritance. Or perhaps he was slightly off his rocker. Only God knows the answer to that.

One of the daughters fell in love, and married. She was promptly removed from the will, and the father did it with such a vehemence that none of the other daughters ever became a bride. This married sister comes into play later in our story.

Miss Devaney lived the quiet life of a spinster, her only real male friendship being that which she had with Brother Boles. Then he died. The years that went by were spent in relative solitude.

A couple years after Boles' death, Violet was approached by B.C. Goodpasture, editor of the Gospel Advocate, who was seeking some of the sermon outlines that he had been informed she possessed. She gave him several, and those were then published in a book called "Sermon Outlines of H. Leo Boles." This book is no longer in print. Three decades passed, and Miss Devaney still kept that brown satchel. In the 1980s, Arthur K. Gardner approached her, asking if there were any outlines that he could use in a book on brother Boles. She gave him some, and they were published, along with a brief biography, in “The Life and Lessons of H. Leo Boles” (available from Gospel Light Publishing, Delight, Arkansas).

But that brown satchel still contained more outlines that hadn’t seen the light of day since that fateful February morning in 1946.

By the mid-1990s, Miss Violet Devaney was a member of the Lord’s church in Russellville, Alabama. It was here that she left this world behind, having faithfully obeyed her father’s wishes, dying an unmarried woman, and went to be in paradise, the home of the faithful.

After her death, her sister—the one who had gone against her father’s edict and chose marriage and family over wealth—came to Russellville to take care of her estate. Among her worldly goods was a very old, very worn, brown satchel. This satchel remained faithful to its duty, caring for the papers and outlines entrusted to it.

When Miss Devaney passed to her reward, Benny Johns was the preacher for the church in Russellville.

The sons of Violet’s married sister gave him full access to the outlines to type them up and hopefully make them available to future generations. He typed them all up, but they remained unseen by the almost the rest of world for two more decades. In the late 1990s, the writer of this article was permitted to see them, and obtained a copy of each of them, which he has kept since that time, unsure of what to do with them, and how to make them available.

It is now 2017, and it has been 71 years since H. Leo Boles took his final breath on this earth. But through his writings (including his sermons), “he being dead, yet speaks.” His sermons are no longer “lost.” By the time you read this, “The Lost Sermons of H. Leo Boles” will be published for the world to see. Unfortunately, the brown satchel is lost, and probably gone forever.

It is my hope that by putting these sermon outlines into print, they can be used to bring glory to God, who makes all things possible.

Elders in the Old Testament

By Richard Mansel

INTRODUCTION

Leadership requires a level of courage that eliminates the timid or vacillating. Some are drawn to the flame because of inadequacy or vanity while others heed the call to make things better. Leadership exposes the character beneath the surface in a way that bluster and bravado can never deliver.

Those who answer the call of leadership must have the spiritual courage to “stand in the gap”¹ (Ezekiel 22:30), ready to face whatever comes. Our faith should be resilient enough to withstand the “flaming darts of the evil one” (Ephesians 6:16, ESV) and persistent enough to never waver (Hebrews 11:6; Revelation 2:10).

Church government that is common to the New Testament is somewhat foreign to the Jewish society of former days. They resided in a theocracy led by God and were governed by the Law of Moses (Deuteronomy 4:1-2).

The modern tolerance of the aged is in stark contrast to the respect they received in ancient societies. Accordingly, their wisdom was utilized and expected in moments of urgency and gravity.

THE TERM

Ancient cultures commonly elevated their elders to leadership positions of varying degrees because of their sage advice and keen eye for reading situations. In Genesis 50:7, we read about the elders of Egypt and in Numbers 22:7, the elders of Midian and Moab. As heads of certain family groups, they had accumulated some wealth and influence in their lives and were able to command authority.

The concept of an elder was akin to the senator in Latin and the sheik in Arabic.² The Semitic root means “to be hoary” which refers to advanced age.³ “The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness” (Proverbs 16:31, KJV). The English Standard Version translates it as “gray hair” and the New King James Version says “silver-haired.”

The modern tolerance of the aged is in stark contrast to the respect they received in ancient societies

The Hebrew word for “elder” literally means “beard,”⁴ so it did have reference to age. However, “In Israel, as among all ancient peoples, the elder is not only a person of advanced age, but also a man of distinct social grade.”⁵

“In all but a few instances, the elders in the Old Testament appear as a distinct social grade or collegiate body with certain political and religious functions, and not merely as ‘old men.’...but we must bear in mind that the word in actual usage need not by its etymology signify an old man any more than ‘Senator’ or ‘alderman’ does in the United States.”⁶

Further complicating the picture is the ambiguity of Scripture on this point.

*“The Old Testament does not explain who the qualified, leading men of Israel were. Although Israel’s elders are mentioned some 100 times throughout the Old Testament, no detailed description of their organization, appointment or qualification is given.”*⁷

We therefore turn to their limited role in Israel’s leadership.

LEADERSHIP

We know that elders were of more than average age and were men of social standing and influence. Above that, we know very little. We don’t have specific passages addressing their qualifications the way we have in the New Testament (1 Timothy 3; Titus 1). We just have to tie together a variety of passages and make application.

When we talk about their responsibilities we need to remember that they were performed by human beings subject to sin, weaknesses, prejudices, political alliances, etc. (Romans 3:23). Some will do well and others will fail. Sadly, how the leadership goes, Israel follows.

In Exodus 18, Moses is overwhelmed with trying to counsel and judge the growing population of Israel. His father-in-law, Jethro, is alarmed at Moses’ work load. His tasks included judging disputes and teaching the Law to the people (Exodus 18:16). Jethro says to Moses after watching him judge the people the entire day, “What is this thing that you are doing for the people? Why do you alone sit, and all the people stand before you from morning until evening?” (Exodus 18:14).

“Moreover you shall select from all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them to be rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens. And let them judge the people at all times. Then it will be that every great matter they shall bring to you, but every small matter they themselves shall judge. So it will be easier for you, for they will bear the burden with you. If you do this thing, and God so commands you, then you will be able to endure, and all this people will also go to their place in peace.” (Exodus 18:21-23).

Moses complied and the providence of God instituted a legal system that would propel the nation into the future. Examining their qualifications we see

God’s hand. They were “literally men of might”⁸ who had the “three qualities of piety, veracity and strict honesty, or incorruptness.”⁹

They were to be “able” or “capable” (NET Bible) men who were undoubtedly able to render decisions on their own without constant supervision. The word “connotes ability, leadership, management, resourcefulness, and due respect.”¹⁰

*“[A form of the word ‘able’] is...used in expressions like ‘mighty man of valor.’ The word describes these men as respected, influential, powerful people, those looked up to by the community as leaders, and those that will have the needs of the community in mind. They will be morally and physically worthy.”*¹¹

Naturally, they must be men who fear God and exhibit humility and respect for the Word of God (James 4:10; Deuteronomy 4:2; 12:32; Proverbs 30:6; Revelation 22:18-19).

*“From the time of their appointment, the ‘rulers’ were not merely judges, but ‘heads’ of their respective companies, with authority over them on the march, and command in the battlefield. Thus the organization was at once civil and military.”*¹²

While these qualifications are for judges and not elders, we know that elders worked with judges for many years to come. Furthermore, we see the type men God desires for leadership. These points are crucial when we look ahead for men who will be leaders in the Lord’s kingdom. Their vision and sagacity will be crucial as they discern the proper paths to lead the brethren.

Jethro instructs Moses in the art of delegation and elders will fall into their roles, as a result.

“Wise, decisive, compassionate leadership is a gift from God that every human community needs. Yet Exodus shows us that it is not so much a matter of a gifted leader assuming authority over people, as it is God’s process for a community to develop structures of leadership in which gifted people can succeed. Delegation is the only way to increase the capacity *of an institution or community, as well as the way to develop future leaders.”*¹³

As the nation grew and time progressed, delegation led to the functions of elders. “From earliest times a judicial body of elders was formed to give judgment on certain cases. They gathered in the gates of the city where rulings were pronounced” (Deuteronomy 21:19; 22:15; 25:7; Ruth 4:1-2).¹⁴

They were tasked to specific kinds of cases. “No professional judgment [was] necessary in such cases: the elders presided over a case, whose consequences [were] clear beforehand.”¹⁵ Judges sat for advanced cases where more skilled knowledge was needed.¹⁶

Concerning the elders of the city, their “functions [were] best exemplified by the pertinent laws of Deuteronomy.”¹⁷ They were usually involved in matters of blood redemption (19:12), rebellious children (21:19), the defamation of a virgin (22:15), and levirate issues (25:9). “All of these cases dealt with the protection of a family and local patriarchal interests.”¹⁸

Judges served in local courts (Deuteronomy 17:8ff; 19:17-18; 25:1-3).¹⁹ Only once do we find situations where the elders were involved in a legal matter as advanced as a murder case. The elders of the city closest to the site of the corpse had certain responsibilities that had to be performed (21:1ff).

The elders of the people represented the people in spiritual matters and in the teaching of the law (Exodus 19:7; 24:1, 9; Deuteronomy 27:1; 29:9ff; 31:9; Joshua 8:33; 24:1). They appointed leaders (1 Samuel 8:4), declared war (Joshua 8:10) and conducted political negotiations (Exodus 3:16-18; 4:29; Numbers 16:25; 2 Samuel 3:17; 5:3).

APPLICATION

The position of Elder under the Law of Moses is different than the position in the New Testament. Yet, we take what we’ve learned and make a few applications so we can better understand God’s plan for the Church today. “For whatever things were written before were written for our learning, that we through the patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope” (Romans 15:4).

It appears that “elders” served an organic function. Their society revered the aged and their influence was obvious. Naturally, God used them to accomplish His goals. Yet, in their origins, we find a nugget that the church can use.

Like the elders of Israel, elders in the New Testament aren’t given age parameters. They must be mature in the faith (1 Timothy 3:6), married and have children (1 Timothy 3:2-5; Titus 1:6). Yet, they come from the people. They’re men who are already working and serving the Lord. The respect they have cultivated helps elevate them to the eldership. By wisdom, presence, and example, the people have witnessed their seriousness of mind and soul.

Elders under the Old Covenant were servants and remained within their boundaries. They worked for and with the judges, kings and leaders of the nation. Their responsibilities were limited but important. They were expected to handle them with respect and sobriety.

Elders in the Lord’s Church need to remember that they’re servants called to do the Lord’s work of tending the flock (Acts 20:28). They must know the brethren, their minds, fluctuations, and trends.

The judges, leaders, and kings had their own problems and stressors. They depended on the elders to be the barometer of the nation and to do what needed to be done in that respect. Likewise successful elders today are focused on their responsibilities rather than trying to do the work of the preacher or the deacons.

The elders were numerous and were to be a united front (Psalm 107:32). Their collective nature is of even greater importance today. As men of God stand for truth and against error, there must be complete agreement and commitment to the doctrines of Scripture.

However, just like today, elders sometimes followed their base instincts instead of God and the nation suffered. Because of their influence, their moral integrity was integral.

“During the early monarchy, the kings depended much on the elders’ cooperation for successful rule” (1 Samuel 15:30; 30:26; 2 Samuel 5:3; 1 Chronicles 21:16).²⁰

David “knew their weakness and fickleness, especially in their unstable political condition. He also knew that he could shepherd the nation effectively only with their cooperation. In a real way, the elders in each city functioned as David’s undershepherds.”

²⁰ Strauch, 144.

Of course, they fell for Absalom's deception and caused great pain to David (2 Samuel 17).

They refused to stand for truth when they served under Ahab and Jezebel (1 Kings 21). During the days of Josiah, the missing Book of the Law was discovered by Hilkiah and was read to the king and the people (2 Kings 22). The elders should have been more diligent to help preserve the Word of the Lord.

Isaiah rebuked the elders of their waste, poor stewardship, abuse of the poor, and for failing to follow God's will (Isaiah 3:14ff).

The lessons are obvious. Elders today must stand alone if necessary to preserve the way of the Lord. They mustn't allow wolves into the fold (Acts 20:29) and never back down from those who threaten the Church. Elders must be warriors for truth.

CONCLUSION

Men of God have been indispensable since Adam failed to lead spiritually in the Garden of Eden (Genesis 3:1-6). The greatest problem in the Lord's church today is a lack of sound leadership. The more we can learn about God's plan for leaders, the better off we will be.

The qualities God desired in judges, prophets, priests, elders, husbands and fathers have, despite their functions and contexts, been basically the same. Put the Lord first, be men of prayer and the Word. We must show our family and the world that God is the answer we all seek. Godly men of strength will desperately be needed until the end of time.

I Can Do All Things Through Christ Which Strengtheneth Me

By Roderick L. Ross

I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me. (Philippians 4:13 KJV)

In May 2011, my vision was blurry with blind spots as I went to bed. My wife was not feeling well, and I assumed I was suffering from another one of my “optical migraines.” The next two days my wife did not feel any better, and I felt worse. I assumed that I had come down with the virus that my wife was suffering from. We both slept most of the day. The next day my wife felt better, having recovered from her virus. My vision, however, had not improved. I had not felt good enough to even notice for the past two days. My “optical migraines” usually lasted about one to two hours. This visual disturbance had lasted three days. We figured that it was time to go to the emergency room.

After an MRI, the doctor came in and said I had suffered a stroke. The stroke did not affect my motor coordination, my speech, my face (a drooping face is a common sign of a stroke), or my ability to swallow. Nothing was affected other than my sight.

I went to a Neurological Ophthalmologist, and after examination he said my vision had been affected to such an extent that “I would never drive, read or work again.” He explained that my eyes were 20/20, but my brain did not interpret the message correctly; therefore, corrective lenses would not correct the problem. I was legally blind.

The best way I can describe it is to describe it graphically. From 9 to 12 on a clock-face, I am blank. The remainder of my eyesight is out of focus, and I am photophobic – overly sensitive to light. Sunlight and fluorescent lights produce a condition that is best described as snowblindness.

It took me three years to convince Social Security of my disability. The court stenographer said that my case was only the second case of my particular condition that had been presented to the Central Ohio court on Social Security in the past twenty years. Thus, for three years we were deprived of any income other than my wife’s. Even my doctor and neurologist had difficulty grasping the circumstances that I now found myself in.

In such circumstances, there is an urge to blame God many times. As Satan said in Job:

And Satan answered the LORD, and said, “Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life. But put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face.” (Job 2:4-5)

One of the members of a congregation that I preach at could not understand why God would allow something like this to happen to me.

I had one advantage over Job that helped beyond measure in facing my condition. Job’s wife told him to curse God and die. My wife provided the love, the courage, the caring, and the encouragement that I needed. She allowed (and made me) do what I could for myself, and helped me with everything that I needed help with. She became my eyes. She drove me wherever I needed to go. She read many things to me.

Then said his wife unto him, “Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Curse God, and die.” But he said unto her, “Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?” In all this did not Job sin with his lips. (Job 2:9-10)

*I had one advantage over Job... My wife provided the love, the courage, the caring, and the encouragement that I needed. ...
She became my eyes.*

With her help and encouragement, I have settled into a routine where I can accomplish what I can. I work for short periods, and rest/nap, and go at it again.

I teach the adult Bible class and preach every Sunday morning in Trimble, Ohio; I preach every Sunday evening in Lancaster, Ohio; I prepare a handout for Bible class, and a handout for the sermon; I send out an e-mail Monday through Friday; I do a radio program that is locally broadcast every Saturday morning; I manage three Facebook groups, and three Facebook pages; and I maintain a website, 321BibleStudy.net. I have written a book that is available on CD, and have compiled a series of articles that will soon be published in book form.

Preaching Sundays wears me out. I am good for nothing on Mondays, usually spending most of the day in bed.

Why and how have I been able to rebound and do as much as I have? I think there are two reasons.

The examples that I saw throughout my life.

I had the privilege of attending school with the first blind person ever to attend normal public school. Holly Reed was her name. She was in my Algebra and Latin classes. She amazed me with what she could do. After all, how can you do binomial equations without being able to see them? She was an inspiration.

In college, the program director of the student radio station had low vision problems. The things he did, and was willing to do, to deal with his problem filled me with wonder and admiration.

My grandfather went blind as a result of his arthritis medicine. Yet, he maintained his cheery disposition.

My youngest son, Rick, suffered from severe, chronic asthma. He was hospitalized 48 times in the first twelve years of his life. One time, he was given a 7% chance of living through the night. Yet, he played soccer, baseball, basketball and on the class field day when he was six came in second in the school. He never panicked. He kept his cool. He did what he could do, and never fretted over what he could not. The doctors were amazed at what he was able to do. One doctor said he had the worst case of asthma he had ever seen. I learned a tremendous amount from watching him.

These examples were a tremendous influence on me, and encouragement that adversity does not have to stop you from doing everything. Sometimes, you can even amaze others and yourself at what you can accomplish.

The attitude which I developed through my study of God's word: one that looks for what can be done, rather than looking for what is prohibited.

The attitude that separated Dirk Phillips from Martin Luther, and which separates the churches of Christ from the religious world is that you look for what can be done, rather than look at what is prohibited.

"It is evident that whatever God has not commanded and has not instituted by express commands of Scripture, he does not want nor does he want to be served therewith, nor will he have his Word set aside nor made to suit the pleasure of men." – Dirk Phillips, Vindication, 1500's

"I can do all things which are not specifically prohibited." – Martin Luther

It is basically answering the question, "Is the Bible a book that tells us what to do? Or, is the Bible a book that tells us what not to do?" Is the Bible positive, or negative?

Generally, we apply this to the church and its actions, but it has a personal application as well.

Too often we concentrate on what our limitations are, rather than what our capabilities are. This is true of everyone; but seems to be magnified in the case of chronic illness, injury, and disability. It is the same concept when we concentrate on our problems, and fail to count our blessings.

We all need to know our limitations (something that sometimes we hate to admit), but we also need to know our abilities.

Too often we think that we need to do great things, or a lot at a time. I was always guilty of this, trying to write in blocks of 24 to 48 hours. Now, I had to work in blocks of 20 minutes, rest an hour, and do it again. It frustrated me, but by persistence I was able to get as much and more done this way than by my marathon sessions.

I looked for ways that I could do things, rather than concentrating on why I couldn't. I utilized reading glasses along with magnifying visors, oversized computer screens, and oversized type. Below is an example of the type I use for my copy of the Bible class and sermon handouts.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3:16)

I read on a computer where I can make the pages 24 inches wide. There is not a Bible printed which is large enough for me to see. I almost exclusively use an audio Bible app on my phone.

The churches that I preach at have graciously allowed me to continue. Instead of reading the scripture during the sermon, I ask the men of the congregation to read it, and I comment on it. (I had seen this done mainly in black congregations at times over the years).

I firmly believe that each person has a responsibility to do what they can.

If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.
(1 Peter 4:11)

I have used this passage as a sort of theme over the years, especially the first part for my preaching. But, it is the second part which made me buck up under difficulty and look for opportunities. Let him do it as of the ability which God giveth. Do what you can. No one can do any more. No one should do any less.

Look at the verses which follow:

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. (1 Peter 4:12-13 KJV)

Although probably speaking of the Roman persecution; disabilities, disappointments, illness, and injuries can change our lives in much the same way. Things happen to people in this life. You are not the first person to face difficulty. Do what you have to do to do what you can and must.

Daniel Sommer suffered a stroke which left him blind while preaching a gospel meeting in Pennsylvania. He finished the meeting, took the train home to Indiana, and it was not till the next morning when he spilled his water that even his family realized what had happened.

We can either whine about our problems, or deal with them, making lemonade out of the lemons.

Then Job arose, and rent his mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worshipped, And said, "Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither: the LORD gave, and the LORD hath taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD." In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly.
(Job 1:20-22)

Not Always Roaring...

By Bill Howard

Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour. (1 Peter 5:8 KJV).

How often have you read this passage or heard it quoted in a sermon? How many times have you stopped to consider the magnitude of this warning? This adversary, the devil, Satan, is an evil and powerful enemy; the devious Denizen of darkness, called the prince of the power of darkness who is bent on robbing you of your fellowship with God and your eternal inheritance. Peter's admonition is for you to be prudent and level headed, to think rationally and not be taken in by the wiles of this enemy: to be alert and recognize the temptations and pitfalls which will present themselves. Make certain that you are cautious and do not let yourself be put into any situation that will cause you to stumble and fall. This enemy is always hostile toward you and always opposed to God.

Peter portrays the enemy as being like the lion. The king of the jungle, the tremendously powerful beast that is very cunning and crafty as it stalks its prey, attacking when least expected. It will attack the weak, the young or struggling animals, choosing victims who are alone or not watchful. The same victims the devil seeks out to capture and devour. He desires to destroy your faith, your purity, your peace, and your good name and is relentless in his pursuit.

Jesus said to some unbelieving Jews: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar and the father of it" (John 8:44). He began his lies when he seduced Eve.

There will be no end to his sly tricks and pernicious methods of capturing any who are not doctrinally sound in the faith, those who are young in the kingdom, those struggling, or those without proper guidance. All must be prepared for the approach of this enemy! You accomplish this preparation by first recognizing that he is, and by knowing what he wishes to achieve. You can protect yourself by staying close to God, by serious study of his word, by sincere dedication to communication with God through prayer, by renewing every day your resolve to worship Him, and always remembering the sacrifice he made for you.

This enemy [Satan] is always hostile toward you and always opposed to God.

After all this, also be assured that the devil is not always roaring. He can approach quietly, slyly, and with trickery. Paul told the Corinthians not to be amazed but recognize that the devil can transform himself into an angel of light (2 Corinthians 11:14). He cautioned in both his epistles to Timothy about falling into reproach and the snare of the devil.

There is no question that temptations will be many and varied. Most likely you will be faced with them every day. Temptations will confront you from many different directions. Jesus said your foes could even be of your own household (Matthew 10:36). Even our Lord was tempted by Satan in the wilderness, but he did not capitulate. "But was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Hebrews 4:15b). Satan was not roaring while attempting to entice Jesus. No doubt he spoke softly as he tried to win Christ with his promises of the world. He wasn't roaring when he approached Eve in the Garden, he simply convinced her to believe his lie. There is no evidence that he was roaring when he coerced Ananias and Sapphira into a lie about their giving. They wanted to be recognized for giving all when they only gave part. Peter questioned: “Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Spirit, and keep back part of the price of the land?” (Acts 5). Does he tempt Christians today to do the same? Most definitely!

Paul to the Corinthians: “There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man” (1 Corinthians 10:13a). Paul warned those Christians about what you and I deal with every day. Temptations are in our face at every turn. The world we live in today is rife with every deviation we can imagine. However, Paul also said: “God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it” (1 Corinthians 10:13b). This is your source of safety: by the Grace of God you will be provided the ability to rise above temptation and not fall. It is your responsibility as a Christian to ward off the attempts of Satan to come into your life. The apostle Paul told the Ephesians not to allow the devil a foothold. “Neither give place to the devil” (Ephesians 4:27). Jesus said: “I will give you power over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you” (Luke 10:19, paraphrased). James in his epistle wrote: “submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you” (James 4:7). Paul wrote: “Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil” (1Thessalonians 5:21-22). Peter said: “The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished” (2 Peter 2:9).

Satan longs to capture your soul. He will use any means available to accomplish that. However he does not desire you nearly as much as your God does. Your God was willing to sacrifice His Son to provide for you the opportunity to be in His kingdom. God will deliver you from temptations just as He will hold the unjust and ungodly for punishment. You must therefore align yourself either with God in His kingdom or with the realm of the evil one; Satan who walks about seeking to destroy, but remember, he is not always roaring.

RESTORATION MOMENTS

The Conversion of Blue Dick

From the book, The Life of Knowles Shaw, Singing Evangelist (by William Baxter)

*A miserable drunk,
A church that wanted nothing to do with him,
And the power of the gospel.*

Knowles Shaw was holding a meeting at some point on the Ohio River, where it was necessary for him to cross frequently. The first night of his meeting, he went down to the river, but found the only ferryman to be a poor, ragged, besotted wretch, no hat on his head, his hair matted, his whole person filthy in the extreme, and giving evidence that he was even then under the influence of drink. His appearance was so forbidding, and his condition such that Shaw was doubtful as to whether it would be safe to entrust himself in a frail skiff with such a ferryman. And had there been any other and safer means of getting across he would have availed himself of it. But there was no other chance, and with some misgivings as to the result, he entered the boat. He soon found that, though under the influence of liquor, the ferryman knew how to manage his skiff, and feeling at ease on that matter, he began to talk with him. He asked him his name.

“Blue Dick,” was the reply.

“But,” said Shaw, “surely that is not really your name.”

“Well,” said he, “if I have any other, it has been so long since I heard it, I have almost forgotten what it is.”

Changing the subject abruptly, he asked, “Why don’t you quit drinking?”

“I can’t,” said the poor wretch.

“Yes, you can,” replied Shaw.

Wondering that a stranger should take any interest in him, he said, “Mister, do you think I could?”

“Of course you can,” said Shaw, in a kind and assuring manner.

The poor fellow sat for some time in silence. It was long since any word of sympathy, interest or encouragement had fallen upon his ear, and the kind words of the stranger reached the heart which all his neighbors thought had ceased to feel. Deeply moved, he looked up and said, earnestly:

“Mister, do you really think I could quit drinking?”

“Have you a wife and children?”

In a voice choked with emotion, and weeping bitterly, he said that he had. The way was now open. Shaw told him he was a preacher, and asked him to come and hear him.

“Why,” said he, “you would not let such a one as me come; and if you were willing, others would not like to see me there.”

Shaw urged him to come, assured him that he should be welcome; that instead of being out of the reach of mercy, that it was such as he that Jesus came to save. Tenderly and earnestly he besought him to change his course, until the poor ferryman began to think that there might be hope even for him. On reaching the other side, Shaw paid him his fare, and, as he did so, he pointed to a saloon that was near, and said, “I do not like the idea of this money going to such a place as that; can’t you promise me that you will not drink any tonight, and I will come back, and you shall take me over the river again.” Blue Dick gave the required promise and they parted; the preacher going to the house of God, and the ferryman, with emotions such as had not stirred in his heart for years, standing in deep thought by the rapid river under the watching stars.

After meeting, Brother Shaw went down to the river, found Blue Dick waiting for him, showing by his manner that he had kept his promise not to drink. He gave him a few words of encouragement, and obtained his promise that he would come and hear him preach the following night.

Great was the astonishment of many to see Blue Dick at church, and greater still to see the preacher, who had seen him come in and drop into the first empty seat that he found near the door, come up to him, take him by the hand, speak a few kind words to him, and ask him to come again. Night after night he came, and the warm hand of the preacher never failed to give that of Blue Dick a friendly grasp, and the fitting words spoken did not fail to strengthen the new purposes that were beginning to take shape in his mind.

The coming of this one, and the marked attention shown him by the preacher, led some of the brethren to fear, yes fear, that this poor outcast might offer himself for membership. They even expressed their fears to Brother Shaw, and predicted that it would ruin the church if one such as he should attempt to enter the fold. Brother Shaw, however, did not fail to show, in their loveliest colors, the tenderness and compassion of Him who came to give hope to the hopeless, to seek and to save the lost. The lost sheep, and the wayward, wretched, ruined prodigal seemed to point to Blue Dick, and Blue Dick himself began to think they meant him; and one night, when the preacher, with even more than his wonted earnestness, urged the despairing and lost to come to Christ as their only hope, Blue Dick rose to come forward and accept the gospel offer. The preacher went halfway down the aisle to meet him; angels doubtless, too, at that moment gave expression to their joy in glad song, and He who died to save the lost was, doubtless, glad to see that the lost was found.

The coming of [Blue Dick] ... led some of the brethren to fear, yes fear, that this poor outcast might offer himself for membership.

But, alas! while there was joy in heaven, the coming of poor Blue Dick to confess his Lord, to strive to lead a better life, did not send a thrill of joy through the church; some there were who, like the elder son in the parable, thought that the returned wanderer would never be other than a disgrace to the family, thought that Blue Dick had gone too far to retrace his steps, and that his newly-formed resolutions would be broken on the very first invitation to take a drink, and that he would soon sink to even a lower depth, if possible, than before. Such was the feeling of opposition with regard to him that Brother Shaw did not take his confession and baptize him for several days, feeling, doubtless, that until he could change their views on the subject, that their coolness would repel and discourage, rather than help and save.

Before the meeting closed, to the wonder of the whole community, Blue Dick made a public confession of his faith in Christ, was baptized, and by his consistent life soon disarmed whatever of objection remained, and was regarded as a standing proof of the power of the gospel.

Blue Dick was no longer there; he was transformed into Brother George M. , one of the best members of the church.

Years passed by; the faithful evangelist revisited the same place. Blue Dick was no longer there; he was transformed into Brother George M. , one of the best members of the church. He was living in a comfortable home, surrounded by a loving and happy family, with every mark of neatness and thrift about them. As soon as Brother Shaw had entered this happy Christian home, the one who had been Blue Dick said: "Brother Shaw, kneel down and thank God for what he has done for me, that I, who when you met me was a poor, miserable, drunken sinner, have been lifted up, and, by the mercy of God, am what I am today." Down they knelt; preacher, husband, wife, and children, all, all wept; but they were tears of joy; and when they parted it was in the glad hope of meeting in that blessed land where no partings shall be.

Divine Peace

By Jake Schotter

The times we are in are troubling. Turmoil is in us, near us, around us, and beyond us, dominating the world. Because of this outer unrest, there is an absence of personal peace for many people. We are now facing street riots, execution-type killings, terrorism, and crime on a regular basis. This is a very troubled world without a doubt. People are searching for peace in all kinds of places but many are not finding it. Why? Because nearly everyone looks in the wrong places. There is but only one source that will satisfy the soul's longing: the peace that is found in the very pages of God's word.

The word "peace" in the Old Testament is "Shalom." It is a wide-covering word, but when it is boiled down, the essence of the word is a wish for completeness, contentment, fulfillment, blessing, a blessing that all that is good would flow into your life. In the New Testament, the Greek counter-part essentially means the same thing: a description of a tranquil state of the soul, a soul at rest, a satisfied soul. This is true peace. The world sees peace as the absence of hostility, unrest, conflict, troubles, and anything that might cause a person to be fearful, anxious, and depressed. This is an incomplete peace but it is the only type the world can give.

Jesus offers pure and divine peace in John 14:27 when He declared to His disciples, "Peace I leave with you, My peace I give to you; not as the world gives do I give to you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." At this time, He is only hours from His execution on the cross. Not only would Jesus be distressed, knowing His time has come, but His disciples are also profoundly troubled. Jesus seeks to reassure them through several promises (John 13-17) and one of those promises is divine peace (John 14:27).

Because we can receive this divine peace, we should recognize four characteristics of this peace.

The first characteristic of this peace is its deliverance. Jesus grants this peace as a gift for being a loving and serving disciple. Christ's death on the cross made this possible (Romans 5:11, 21). We are able to receive this peace: "having been justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Romans 15:1). In Ephesians 6:15, Paul calls the gospel, "The gospel of peace" because it is by which the sinner may be reunited with God.

Before you are saved, you are an enemy of God (Romans 5:10; James 4:4) and have no true peace. Paul writes in Colossians, "For it pleased the Father that in Him all the fullness should dwell, and by Him to reconcile all things to Himself, by Him, whether things on earth or things in heaven, having made peace through the blood of His cross. And you, who were once alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now He has reconciled in the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy, and blameless, and above reproach in His sight" (Colossians 1:19-22). When we are reconciled with God, we can truly have peace, and be able to say "It is Well With My Soul." This peace is an active, enduring reality: it comforts us from anxiety, fear, doubt, and despair because being in Christ means we can have courage, confidence, and contentment (Romans 15:13). We may know these things because the Holy Spirit is the security of this peace (Acts 2:38; 5:32; Ephesians 1:14).

Faith's characteristics are:

Its deliverance

Its divinity

Its distinctiveness

Its durability

The second characteristic of this peace is its divinity. Jesus says, "My peace I give to you," "My peace." This peace does not come from an earthly, human source but from our God in heaven! Throughout the Bible, we read God is "the God of peace." In 12 of the 13 letters Paul wrote, he prays for his recipients to have "Grace and peace from our Father and Christ Jesus." Galatians 5 lists one of the fruits of the Spirit as “peace.” This peace only comes from a divine source—God, Jesus, and the Holy Spirit.

The third characteristic is its distinctiveness. There is no other peace like the peace God gives. The world’s peace is a false peace. The Durants in their history of the world give this statistic: since 36 B.C. there have been nearly 15,000 wars and an average of 3 wars start every year. The New York Times once observed that “peace is a fable.” The only peace this world can know is shallow and unfulfilling—most people’s pursuit of peace is only an attempt to get away from problems. In a futile pursuit, Godless individuals can never know true peace. There is no true comfort given by the world’s peace from God’s wrath (Isaiah 48:22; 57:21; Jeremiah 6:14; 1 Thessalonians 5:3). It is only through God that true peace may be found and obtained. (adapted from John MacArthur.)

The final characteristic of this peace is its durability. Look back at Jesus’ statement: “Stop letting your heart be troubled, nor let it be fearful.” Even with all these incredible promises of peace, it’s not a complete reality for many Christians, who still live lives lacking peace. Peace is available but we must search for it. Jesus said, in essence, “All the resources of heaven are available, but to access that, you ask in My name” (John 14:13). Jesus Christ promises durability in the Scriptures and gives it to us—if we search for it! “Seek peace and pursue it” (Psalm 34:14 and 1 Peter 3:11). Isaiah 26:3 reveals, “You will keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on You, because he trusts in You.” Colossians 3:15 says, “Let the peace of God rule in your hearts.” We read Matthew 6:25-34, which essentially says, “Stop worrying.” But how? What’s the key? We must “Seek first His kingdom and His righteousness.”

Paul writes in Philippians 4:6-7, “Be anxious for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God; and the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding, will guard your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.” We must search the Scriptures for how to attain and keep this peace.

We need to have faith to have this peace. We need faith to go to God in the midst of our troubles. We need to believe in His power, His promises, His provision, and His protection. To increase in our faith, we have to think about God—His person, attributes, words, and works. The more we focus on God, the more we depend on Him. When we depend on Him, we are able to find peace. This is what a renewed mind of a Christian dwells on (Romans 12:1-2; Ephesians 4:23; Colossians 3:2). In Philippians 4:8-9, Paul wrote, “Finally, brethren, whatever things are true...noble...just...pure... lovely...of good report, if there is anything praiseworthy—meditate on these things.”

Godless individuals can never know true peace. There is no true comfort given by the world...

Do we desire peace? Are we prepared to surrender our lives to Christ and live obediently to Him, putting all our faith in Him, and renewing our thinking to the things of God? Lasting peace is only available to those “in Christ,” those who have been baptized for the remission of sins and live faithfully, with a mindset fixed “on things above” (Colossians 3:2). Our goal is to sing, “Peace, perfect peace, in this dark world of sin.” Do we have this divine peace?

The Parable of the Lighted Candle

By Devin Self

In my childhood I remember going spelunking in a cave up around Jasper, Arkansas. It wasn't very much of a journey into the cave but it was enough to make my family and myself nervous. But one of the things I remember most of all about the cave was how dark it was, and how relieving it was when there was light around. You could get yourself into a real mess if there wasn't light: you could fall into a hole, get trapped somehow, or even worse. And the people that had the light were always the ones you wanted to stick close by to.

What this reminds me of is the parable of the lighted candle that Jesus told in Luke 11:33-36. Read there with me: "No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light. The light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; but when thine eye is evil, thy body also is full of darkness. Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee be not darkness. If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light."

Now after reading this passage of scripture, look with me closely at each part, and remember back to the story I told you just a minute ago. How effective would the light that others were carrying be to us if they hid it to themselves or used it only where they wanted to see? It wouldn't be very effective at all, and wouldn't help us whatsoever—and in the same way, if we have the light in us, but don't share it with others who are lost in the dark, they will never get to see how wonderful God's love and word are.

Luke 11:34 says "When thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light, but when thine eye is evil thy body also is full of darkness." A major part of the eye is its ability to focus in and out on things. And focusing is a major part of how we can see clearly what it is we want to see. But if our focus, not only in our eye but in our lives, is directed towards evil things then evil things will be what fills inside of us—so we must be careful where our focus is directed. Just as it says in Luke 11:35, "Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee be not darkness." Another verse is 3 John 11, "Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God." The good news, though, is if we keep our eye solely on God and live our lives with him in our focus, then we can be full of light like Jesus said in Luke 11:36. And not only that, but others can be led to the light of God's word as well, because they will be drawn to us, seeing how we show that God is in our life. And they will also want to know more. Just like a light shining in the cave for me as a kid—it drew me nearer. The last verse I want you to read with me is John 12:35, "Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth."

Have you given your life completely to God? You can do so through hearing the word of God, as it says in Romans 10:17; believing, as it says in Mark 16:16; repenting, as it says in Acts 17:30; confessing, as it says in Romans 10:9; being baptized, as it says in Acts 2:38. Then you need to be faithful unto death, as it says in Revelation 2:10; and after this we must "study to show thyself approved unto God," as it says in 2 Timothy 2:15.

Are you staying near the light?

CHRISTIANS: Different Cultures, Different Races, Different Generations, Different People

By Joseph T. McWhorter

On September 25, 1957, nine African American teenagers ascended the steps of the Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas. They were escorted into the school by U.S. Army paratroopers at the order of President Dwight Eisenhower. Outside a barrier of soldiers were hundreds of angry Americans, appalled and disgusted that people of a different color would be allowed to learn alongside their children.

On April 7, 1994, the Hutu government of Rwanda sanctioned the launch of mass genocide of the Tutsi people, a rival tribe. In the following weeks, nearly one million men, women, and children were killed and twice that many displaced simply because of the content of their blood.

Between 1933 and 1945, German Nazis under the leadership of Adolf Hitler carried out the persecution of Jews and minorities. Before the end of the Second World War, more than 11 million Jews, Soviets, Poles, Serbs, mentally and physically disabled individuals, gypsies, Freemasons, Slovenes, homosexuals, and Jehovah's Witnesses along with many other ethnic, political, and religious minorities were killed. Millions more were subjugated and tortured for the sake of cleansing and preserving the "superior Aryan race."

The mistreatment of women is a tragic thread woven through the tapestry of secular history. Even many Christian men have misapplied and abused the Bible to hold social and economic superiority over women. Historically women have suffered from abuse, unequal treatment, loss of basic rights, and scorn just for their gender.

A rampant plague today is the disrespect that generations have for each other. The young despise the old for ruining the world and abusing their power. The elderly look down on the youthful for being irresponsible and idealistic. Men and women who should be able to work together and learn from each other instead look on each other with contempt.

Why does it happen? Why do human beings so often have a compass that directs their scorn and depreciation towards those who are different? Why is bullying such an epidemic in America, not only in schools but in the workplaces and social settings of adults? Why do we laugh about those with developmental disorders, mocking them with offensive gestures and cruel jokes? Why do we barricade ourselves off into little social groups of people who are "like us" while pointing out and avoiding outliers? We don't like differences.

Today, many well-meaning individuals are trying to encourage us to be blind to color, race, age, gender, culture, health, and any other factors that individualize us. It is considered a virtue to "not be able to see differences." They have come out with teeth barred against the bigotry and hate that has prevailed in the world for so long. But are they right? Does true tolerance and an attitude of love towards all mean being blind to what makes people who they are?

Sadly, many churches have not kept themselves free from the fray. On one hand, some Christians have misapplied and butchered scripture to advance their own agenda. They have misused God's word to justify slavery, abuse of women, and the hate and mistreatment of other cultures. Too often the church has become an exclusive club for people who look good to each other. On the other hand, many Christians have bought into the methods of the world by saying that there are no differences between humans. Some have mutilated the individualities that God has given us. Many have gone so far as to ignore clear sin and redefine salvation in an effort “not to judge.” In these situations, the glorious body of Jesus, designed for unity and celebrated as a haven for diversity and salvation, has been made into just another sect of the world.

Where must we go to find the answers? Who must we ask to help overcome the issues of “difference” that we face in our communities, in our churches, and in our nations? Shall we seek some spiritual sage high on some remote hill or behind the walls of a golden city? Shall we ask a powerful leader of men in a great metropolis or behind an executive’s desk? If we seek to find an answer to the question of the diversity of human kind, we must ask the Creator of human kind.

Can we ever find unity in a world of diversity and difference? What can we do as individuals? What role does the Christ’s church play in the struggle? Let’s search the word of God and find out.

From The Beginning

“In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth...God created man in his own image, in the image of God he created him; male and female he created them.” (Genesis 1:1, 27)

Mankind: the crown of creation. It is hard to fathom that all the diversity that humanity has today sprung from two individuals. Different colors of eyes, skin, and hair; the spectrum of personality; levels of athleticism; and genetic predispositions all came from the genetic code of two individuals.

What did the first two humans look like? What kind of personality did they have? What was their taste in fruits and vegetables? Did they most enjoy the feeling of cold mist on their skin or the way the soft leaves brushed against their arms when they walked with God in the garden? A host of other mysteries about their individuality could be probed.

None of these questions are answered in Scripture. They were both made in the image of God. They were both made to glorify God. They were both made to subdue and be sovereign over it. There was one man. There was one woman. It must have been amazing for the two of them to discover their differences and similarities. They were companions suited for each other (Gen. 2:18), yet individuals made differently.

Fast forward in time to Genesis chapter 4. Children. Picture the amazement those parents had at the perfectly sculpted pieces of God’s creation, both the same as their parents in form and in nature, both individuals. As they grew, imagine the wonder they had at the beauty of their different personalities and tastes. One son, Cain, had a love for the land. He cultivated and kept the crops of the field. The other son, Abel, loved the beasts that walked the earth. He protected and watched over them. The first parents were graced with more little blessings from the creator. Those children became parents and the population of the world began to explode. Today the inhabitants of planet earth exceed 7 billion individuals, all descendants of that blessed couple we read about in Genesis chapter 2.

If we seek to find an answer to the question of the diversity of human kind, we must ask the Creator of human kind.

In Acts chapter 17, the Apostle Paul had an opportunity to address the philosophers of Athens on the outcropping of rock known as the Areopagus. He used this unique chance to tell them about the one God of heaven. He told them that the God who created the world doesn’t live in man-made temples or shrines and that he need not be served by the hands of men. He revealed that all we have is from God. He then said, “And he made from one man every nation of mankind to live on all the face of the earth...” (Acts 17:26)

The prophet Malachi reminded us just how ridiculous it is to mistreat our fellowman and why. “Have we not all one Father? Has not one God created us? Why then are we faithless to one another, profaning the covenant of our fathers?” (Mal 2:10.) It is ridiculous to look down on or mistreat other people for any reason, just based on the fact that God made us all and he made us from the same two individuals. We are all brothers in humanity.

Even with all that being true, these wrongs still happen in the world. The hate, abuse, and bigotry are nowhere near being abolished. Sin of this sort runs rampant and Satan smiles. If man’s hope for unity is to be fulfilled in the world, we don’t have much hope.

Where is the unity?

“There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is no male and female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus.” (Galatians 3:28)

If ultimate unity cannot be found in the institutions of man, where can it be found? Just over 2000 years ago, a rabbi named Jesus came to the hills and plains of Galilee heralding the dawn of a new age. He spoke with authority, He had power over disease and the elements, and He filled all the qualifications of a king that the nation of Israel was waiting for. He wasn't just a good teacher. He was the Son of God. He was the Messiah.

Centuries before Jesus was born, the prophet Isaiah pleaded with the nation of Judah for reform. He begged his people to follow God again and save themselves from an eminent siege and captivity. He also spoke about a time long after they would return home from that captivity. He spoke about the age that Jesus would bring.

It shall come to pass in the latter days that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established as the highest of the mountains, and shall be lifted up above the hills; and all the nations shall flow to it, and many peoples shall come, and say: “Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, that he may teach us his ways and that we may walk in his paths.” For out of Zion shall go the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. (Isaiah 2:2-3)

The promise given was of a single place where all nations and all people could go to reach God. One great mountain where everyone was welcome, no matter their background. He spoke more of that place in chapter 65.

They shall not labor in vain or bear children for calamity, for they shall be the offspring of the blessed of the LORD, and their descendants with them. Before they call I will answer; while they are yet speaking I will hear. The wolf and the lamb shall graze together; the lion shall eat straw like the ox, and dust shall be the serpent's food. They shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain,” says the LORD. (Isaiah 65:23-25)

The picture the prophet paints for us is one of unity and peace for the offspring of the Lord. Creatures that could not live in harmony in the normal world now live in harmony. Of course, he didn't mean that animals would literally change their diet and never attack each other. His purpose was symbolic. The enemies that humanity faces because of differences in the world are abolished in this Holy Mountain. They do not harm or hurt. This haven God promised is the church.

During Jesus' ministry, he taught a revolutionary way of life. He taught a lifestyle devoted to loving God and loving each other. He unveiled a new body of people that was coming after His death where those principles would reign. He lived the principle, too. When Jesus taught and ministered, He didn't just go to palaces and the homes of popular people. He had conversations about salvation with foreign women (John 4). He ate meals with tax collectors (Matthew 9, Luke 19). He ministered to the poorest and most defeated. Even his closest circle of friends and followers included illiterate fisherman, a tax collector, a former terrorist, a loudmouth, and a doubter.

The world searches for a safe place of inclusion. They want to find a locus where all individuals can work together as one. If they only looked with honest eyes toward Jesus and His glorious church, they would see that all they are truly searching for can be found. In Jesus, we can all find inclusion. Jew, Gentile, man, woman, American, Arab, African, Brazilian, rich, poor, slave, freeperson, Democrat, Republican, red, yellow, black, or anything else you may be are all welcome.

Look out at the world. Mankind is God's anthology. We are a collection of unique stories, each one different... But we all have the same need

So much is said in the letters written by Jesus' apostles about this concept of being different but unified. Perhaps the most significant of these passages is found in 1 Corinthians 12. The greatest significance of this chapter is of Christians possessing different God-given abilities, but in verses 12-26 he speaks somewhat more broadly. Paul uses the human body to teach an object lesson. He challenges us to imagine the body as one huge individual body part, like one big ear or one big toe. That body would be useless. The church is no different. He wrote, “For in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body—Jews or Greeks, slaves or free—and all were made to drink of one Spirit. For the body does not consist of one member but of many” (1 Corinthians 12:13-14). God revealed to us that while we are a single unit as the church, we are not expected to be all the same. Actually God expects quite the opposite. He celebrates our differences. Our diversity makes us a stronger whole.

Look out at the world. Mankind is God's anthology. We are a collection of unique stories, each one different. We have different hair, different skin, different body shapes, different teeth, different voices, different fingerprints, different tastes, different loves, different wounds, different memories, different joys, and different lives. But we all have the same need. The apostle Paul penned the following words to the Christians living in the city of Rome.

But now the righteousness of God has been manifested apart from the law, although the Law and the Prophets bear witness to it—the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ for all who believe. For there is no distinction: for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, and are justified by his grace as a gift, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus... (Romans 3:21–24)

God says there is only one difference in mankind that matters: sinner or saint. Either we are living in rebellion against God or we have been rescued, cleansed, and justified by the blood of God's son. Mankind's one unifying trait through all time and in every place under heaven is the need for God. We need His love. We need His grace. We need His salvation. Every one of us has sinned and every one of us has access to Jesus' blood.

If we want to be a strong church; if we want to fulfill our God-given purpose; if we want to please Him, we need to work together. We must rise above the impassioned rivalries of the world and recognize that our differences make us strong. The world may never find unity. We may never find inclusion in it. Even if we can find no other place, God welcomes us into his church. He embraces our differences. All we have to do is submit our will to Him. The world needs to know that.

Biblical Biography: Barnabas

By Bradley S. Cobb

Encourager and Apostle of the Church

Joses is a unique individual. This Levite is the first Christian outside of the twelve apostles to be named in the book of Acts (4:36).¹ ² He was so well-known and well-loved by the twelve that they gave him the nickname “Barnabas,” which means “son of exhortation.”³ This nickname stuck, and it is the only name by which he is mentioned throughout the rest of the Bible.

Barnabas sold some land to make sure that the poor Christians in Jerusalem had enough to eat, and he placed it in the care of the apostles. Other people did similar things, but Barnabas is the one who is singled out in the history of the early church, because he plays a much bigger role later on. But from this, we can see that Barnabas truly cared for his brethren in Christ. He wasn’t concerned about building wealth for himself, nor was he worried about owning a lot of land. He was more interested in “how can I help others.” He was a helper and an encourager. This made him stand out in the eyes of the apostles.

Barnabas next appears some years later,⁴ and still showing these same qualities. Saul of Tarsus, the former Christian-killer, had seen the light and obeyed

Christ, but he had a very difficult time convincing the church of that. In fact, the Christians in Jerusalem wanted nothing to do with him—they thought he was lying, attempting to trick them so that he could drag them all into prison (Acts 9:26). But while the whole church at Jerusalem rejected Saul, Barnabas stood up for him. Barnabas met with Saul and heard his side of the story. Then he arranged a meeting with the apostles, where he—Barnabas—told them that Saul had seen Jesus in the road, and that the Lord had spoken to him, and that he had preached boldly in Damascus. Barnabas didn’t just arrange this meeting; he put his entire reputation on the line by standing up for Saul of Tarsus. And it was because of the support of Barnabas that Saul became a welcome member there (Acts 9:27-28).

Barnabas didn’t just arrange this meeting; he put his entire reputation on the line by standing up for Saul of Tarsus.

Sometime soon thereafter, Saul’s life was threatened, so the brethren sent him back to his home of Tarsus. But then came momentous news, that the Gentiles were now being accepted by God into His church! Cornelius and his family had been converted, and then several Christians in Antioch began converting large numbers of Gentiles. It is here that Barnabas again appears.

The church in Jerusalem heard this wonderful news and sent Barnabas to Antioch. The Greek word used in Acts 11:22 for “sent forth” is the verb form of “apostle.” Barnabas was, at this point, an apostle of the church in Jerusalem, sent to see what was happening in Antioch. When he arrived, he was overjoyed and served as an encourager to them, bringing many people to the Lord. But Barnabas had other plans as well. He remembered a young man named Saul who was a bold preacher, and who had to be sent back home to Tarsus to keep him safe. Barnabas went to Tarsus and found his friend. Saul had not lost his zeal for the Lord and they both returned to Antioch, where they worshiped with the church for a whole year (Acts 11:23-26).

² A very few ancient Greek manuscripts have “Joses Barnabas” instead of “Joseph Barsabbas” in Acts 1:23, and from that, some have suggested that Barnabas was one of the two men considered to take Judas’ place as an apostle. The evidence is against this. First, the significant majority of manuscripts do not say “Joses Barnabas.” Second, the man in Acts 1:23 is called “Justus,” and that name is never used to describe the man we know as Barnabas. Third, when Barnabas appears on the scene in Acts 4:36, Luke introduces him as someone that has not yet appeared in the book (giving name, surname, birthplace, Jewish ancestry, etc...). These considerations eliminate the idea that Barnabas was the one who wasn’t chosen to replace Judas Iscariot.

³ KJV says “son of consolation,” Acts 4:36.

Around that time, a prophet came to Antioch, telling them about a great famine that was going to come upon Judea. The Christians in Antioch all pitched in to aid their brethren, and when it came time to choose two men that they trusted enough to send to Jerusalem with all that money, it was Barnabas and Saul. The word “sent” in Acts 11:30 is the verb form of “apostle.” Barnabas went from being an apostle of the church in Jerusalem—sent to Antioch—to being an apostle of the church in Antioch—sent to Jerusalem. And when their mission was completed, they went back to Antioch (Acts 12:25-13:1). Barnabas was a man who made sure he saw his mission through to the end, and didn’t shirk in the face of difficulty.

Apostle of the Holy Spirit

In Antioch, a group of prophets (including Barnabas) were serving God and fasting, the Holy Spirit called Barnabas (and Saul) for a specific work, to act as a missionary throughout Asia Minor. Barnabas, along with Saul, brought his nephew John Mark along on the journey. Barnabas had gone from being an apostle of the church at Jerusalem and of the church at Antioch to being an apostle of the Holy Spirit.⁵ Their first stop of note was when Barnabas (and Saul) were called by Sergius Paulus, desiring to hear the word of God. It is here that Barnabas shows another trait: humility. A sorcerer named Elymas tried to keep Sergius Paulus from obeying the gospel. Barnabas could have taken the lead and put him in his place, but he didn’t, because Saul (now going by the name of Paul) took care of it.⁶ Barnabas had the background—loved and respected by the apostles. Barnabas had the prominence—an apostle of two different congregations, and listed first among the prophets in Antioch. But he knew that Paul was destined for great things in the work of the church. He had told this to the apostles in Jerusalem, and he didn’t stand in Paul’s way. Instead, Barnabas humbly let Paul take the spotlight. By the end of this event, it was no longer “Barnabas and Saul,” but “Paul and his company.”⁷ John Mark, for some unknown reason, went home at this point.

⁵ The message given directly by the Holy Spirit originated with Jesus Christ (John 16:12-15), and thus it is also accurate to say that during this missionary journey, Barnabas was an apostle of Jesus Christ. That does not mean that he was one of the twelve apostles, or that he was able to pass on miraculous gifts; it simply means that he was one sent on a mission by Jesus Christ Himself.

Barnabas continued to be an encourager, certainly to Paul, but also to the people they met on their journey. Acts 13:43 shows Barnabas and Paul encouraging Jews and religious proselytes to follow the grace of God. But at the same time, Barnabas also stood up to those who would hinder others from obeying the gospel. When the Jews stirred up people and spoke against the message of Christ, Barnabas, along with Paul, expressed the rejection of the Jews and the acceptance of the Gentiles. The persecution continued, however, and Barnabas and Paul were thrown out of the city.

In Iconium, Barnabas preached the gospel, and the Jews were divided. Some of them tried to stone Barnabas, but he was able to escape the city with Paul.⁸ The pair went to Lystra, where Barnabas and Paul both preached. After Paul healed a man, the people all began to cry out that Barnabas and Paul were gods coming to earth in the form of men.⁹ It’s interesting that they called Barnabas “Zeus,”¹⁰ since Zeus is the most powerful Greek god. In carvings and reliefs, Zeus is always pictured as being very muscular and tall. It is possible that Barnabas was an imposing figure,¹¹ while Paul wasn’t as much. Paul was the main speaker, and so they called him “Hermes.”¹²

The priest of Zeus tried to offer a sacrifice to them, and the people were joining in, but the apostle Barnabas (along with Paul) ran back and forth telling them to stop.¹³ He tore his clothes, pleading with the people, “Why are you doing these things? We are men, just like you!” And he pleaded with them to turn ⁹ “The Roman poet Ovid (43 B. C. - AD 17) (Metamorphoses VIII, 626ff) records the ancient myth concerning a visit of Zeus and Hermes to the neighboring region of Phrygia, disguised as mortals. All turned them away except one old couple, Philemon and Baucis, on the Lycanian border. Later a flood came in judgment and drowned all except this couple” (Kent, pp. 116-117, cited by Mark Dunagan in his notes on Acts 14:12).

¹⁰ KJV renders it “Jupiter,” but the Greek word is Zeus.

¹² Hermes, or “Mercury” (KJV) was the messenger of the gods.

¹³ Acts 14:14 specifically calls Barnabas an “apostle.” But he is not to be viewed as one of the “twelve apostles”—he is an apostle of the Holy Spirit and the church in Antioch.

away from the worship of false gods and to turn to the one true God of heaven. It took all that Barnabas and Paul had to keep them from offering that sacrifice. And once that catastrophe was averted, other Jews came in and stoned Paul, dragging him outside of the city, and leaving him for dead. But the next day, Barnabas and his beaten and bloodied friend went to Derbe and preached.¹⁴

From that point, Barnabas and Paul made their way back to Antioch, stopping at the churches they planted and encouraging the members. When they made it to Antioch, their mission was “fulfilled” (Acts 14:26) and they reported to the whole church all the things that had happened.

Apostle of the Church—in front of the Apostles

Barnabas did not shy away from debate. There were men who came from Judea to Antioch claiming that unless these Gentile converts were circumcised and kept the Law of Moses, they couldn’t be saved.¹⁵ It was Barnabas, as well as Paul, who stood up to them: Luke doesn’t mention anyone else. This was something that shook the church at Antioch greatly, something which Barnabas and Paul could not sit idly by and allow to happen. Barnabas stood up, as did Paul, and there was a very heated argument and debate over the matter. It is most likely that this debate took place in the assembly of the saints on the Lord’s Day, since “the brethren” were present when it happened.

These troubling teachers from Judea suggested that the matter could be solved by going to Jerusalem and letting the apostles and elders make the determination.¹⁶ To this, Barnabas and Paul agreed, and the church at Antioch sent them to Jerusalem.¹⁷ Barnabas was again an apostle of the church at Antioch, as was Paul. On their way to Jerusalem, Barnabas and Paul took their time and stopped at several cities, proclaiming the salvation of the Gentiles—the same thing they were going to Jerusalem to prove—and caused happiness to flow throughout the church in those places.¹⁸

Arriving in Jerusalem, Barnabas and Paul were welcomed back with open arms. Barnabas was well-known and well-loved by the apostles, and was remembered fondly by the members in that city for his good deeds and work for the Lord. It was here in Jerusalem that Barnabas brought money from the sale of his land to aid hungry Christians. It was here in Jerusalem that Barnabas proclaimed their biggest persecutor had been converted. It was here in Jerusalem that Barnabas brought a sizable gift from the church in Antioch to aid with the famine relief. When Barnabas came, it always seemed to be an uplifting event—and this time was no different.

*Barnabas was well-known and well-loved... for his good deeds and work for the Lord... When Barnabas came, it always seemed to be an uplifting event

Speaking before the whole church in Jerusalem, along with the apostles and elders, Barnabas and Paul both rehearsed all the things that God had done with them, sending them on a missionary journey, blessing their efforts to bring the Gentiles to Christ, and confirming their message with miracles. Some of the Pharisees among the church opposed them, and there was much debate again. At that point, Peter stood up and reminded them of his experience with Cornelius, how that Gentile man received the miraculous gift of the Holy Spirit. The not-so-subtle message was, “If you condemn Barnabas and Paul for not circumcising Gentiles who become Christians, then you’re also condemning me, and condemning God for accepting the Gentiles.”

This statement of Peter silenced the crowd, and they all began to listen to Barnabas and Paul. Barnabas is listed first in Acts 15:12 because he had a much greater reputation and influence with the Christians in Jerusalem; he probably did most of the talking as well. He commanded the attention of the multitude, and told them how God Himself verified that He accepted their ministry to the Gentiles—without cir-

¹⁵ Acts 15:1

¹⁶ One has to wonder if Paul considered himself one of the official “apostles” at this point, because if he did, he could easily have stated, “I am an apostle,” and settled the matter right then and there. It is possible that Paul recognized his reputation as a turncoat from Judaism, and decided it would be more judicious to allow the other apostles to speak on the matter—even though they would say the same thing that he did.

cumcision—permitting them to perform miracles and wonders.¹⁹

After hearing their testimony, James (the brother of the Lord) stated they were going to write a letter expressing the Holy Spirit’s decision (Acts 15:28), and send it with Barnabas and Paul. But they also were going to send two of their own with them, Judas Barsabbas, and Silas²⁰ as representatives of their congregation. The letter, given by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, places Barnabas’s name first. Even at this point in time, after their first missionary journey, Barnabas was still more influential and well-known throughout the churches than Paul was. It was at this time that James, Peter, and John publicly gave Barnabas and Paul the “right hands of fellowship,”²¹ ending the debate on whether Gentiles could be accepted into the church as Gentiles.

Barnabas and Paul, along with Silas and Judas, went to Antioch, called the whole church together and presented the letter to them. Everyone was very pleased and comforted by it. So for a long time, Barnabas and Paul worked with the church in Antioch.

Stumbling and Separating

While they were in Antioch, Peter came up to visit, and was in full fellowship with the Christians there—both Jew and Gentile. Barnabas and Paul were spending time with them as well, but then trouble arose. Some Jews from Jerusalem came up, and Peter was afraid of what they would think and say if they saw him eating with Gentiles—regardless of the fact that they were Christians—so he got up and ignored them. The other Jews that were there saw Peter leave the company of the Gentiles, and so they followed suit.²² This mass exodus from showing fellowship with the Gentiles was so pervasive and persuasive that even Barnabas fell prey to it. He joined Peter—a man who had been his friend for years—and avoided eating with the Gentiles. Paul was shocked and appalled at the hypocrisy of these Jewish Christians—but then he adds the words “even Barnabas.”²³ The hypocrisy was so overwhelming that it even got Barnabas—the last person Paul ever expected to turn away from the Gentiles.

How horrible must Barnabas have felt when he listened to his protégé put Peter in his place, realizing that those words also condemned him. Barnabas humbly repented of his hypocrisy, and no doubt apologized to the Gentile Christians for getting caught up in peer pressure. Barnabas even apologized to Paul, and all was forgiven.

Sometime after that event, Barnabas was approached by Paul with an idea: “Let’s go visit our brethren in every city where we’ve preached the word of the Lord, and see how they are doing.”²⁴ Barnabas was open to the idea, but wanted to bring John Mark with them. Paul was very insistent that John Mark had abandoned them before, and that he didn’t want such a person accompanying them.

Luke says “the contention was so sharp between them that they departed asunder from one another.”²⁵ Barnabas tried to reason with Paul, but Paul was hard-headed in this matter. You can imagine the argument.

Paul: Barnabas, no! John Mark cannot be trusted. I will have nothing to do with him.

Barnabas: Paul, that’s exactly what the Christians in Jerusalem said about you. I stood up for you then, and I’m standing up for John Mark now. Give him another chance.

Paul: No, I’m not going to risk being abandoned by him again.

Barnabas was willing to give John Mark another chance, but Paul wasn’t. As a result, the two men who had been so closely linked for years divided. Barnabas was disappointed in Paul’s decision, but that didn’t mean he didn’t still love him. Barnabas and Paul were still in full fellowship with each other, even though they were no longer working together. Barnabas takes John Mark with him, and they sail off to his home country of Cyprus,²⁶ where they work with the churches that Barnabas had helped plant years earlier.

¹⁹ When God permitted someone to perform miracles, it was a confirmation of the message that was being preached. Since Barnabas and Paul were able to perform miracles, it showed that God approved of their message. See Acts 16:20. For more information on this subject, see this author’s book, The Holy Spirit in the Book of Acts.

²⁰ These two men will be discussed in more detail later in this book.

er.²⁷ But because Barnabas insisted on giving John Mark another opportunity to prove himself, he basically disappears from the rest of the biblical record.

Barnabas was willing to give John Mark another chance, but Paul wasn't. ...
Barnabas was disappointed in Paul's decision, but that didn't mean he didn't still love him.

Paul does bring his name up one last time in his letter to the Corinthians, years later, showing that (1) Barnabas was still very well-known and well-respected throughout the churches, (2) that he and Paul were still friends and fellow-workers in the kingdom, and (3) that Barnabas was seen as a person in the church whose actions and teachings could be trusted. Paul appeals to the example of the apostles, of the brothers of the Lord (James and Jude among them), and then of Barnabas. This tells us that Paul still thought highly of the man who defended him, who sought him out, and who worked side-by-side with him for years.

Tradition

Tertullian, who lived from AD 155 to 240, stated that Barnabas was the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews.²⁸ Hippolytus of Rome (AD 170-235), as well as Clement of Alexandria, states that Barnabas was one of the seventy disciples²⁹ sent out by Jesus Christ in Luke 10:1-24.³⁰ The Clementine Recognitions (written approximately AD 200-400) identify Barnabas as Matthias, and even has him preaching about Jesus in Rome before the crucifixion.³¹

²⁷ See Acts 13:4-13, 15:39.

²⁸ Conybeare and Howson argue for this interpretation as well.

³⁰ The seventy were "sent forth," which is the verb form of "apostle." If Barnabas were truly among that number, then that would add yet another way in which he was an apostle.

³¹ The Clementine Recognitions is a writing which claims to be from Clement of Rome (died approximately AD 101), describing how Clement (who is also identified in the story as the cousin of Caesar) saved Barnabas from an angry mob, and how Barnabas

There is also a writing called "The Epistle of Barnabas," which Clement of Alexandria (AD 150-215) believed was written by Barnabas. This writing was held in such high regard in some circles that it was regarded as part of the inspired word of God by Clement of Alexandria and Origen, both of whom quoted it as authoritative. It was also included in Codex Sinaiticus (a 4th-Century New Testament collection) and the "Jerusalem Codex" (11th-century), but the early church historian Eusebius objected to its inspiration. The Epistle refers to the destruction of the temple in Jerusalem as a past event, meaning it cannot be dated any earlier than AD 70.³² Miracles in the church—including inspiration—ended by the time Jerusalem was destroyed.³³ Therefore, the "Epistle of Barnabas" cannot be inspired by God and deserves no place in the Bible. It is also doubtful that it was written by Barnabas at all.³⁴

According to early church tradition, Barnabas was in Cyprus, teaching boldly in a synagogue when Jews from Syria and Salamis fell on him, dragged him out of the synagogue, tortured him, and then stoned him to death. After this, John Mark buried him and went to tell Paul and Peter.³⁵ This was said to take place in AD 61. Another writing, called the "Acts of Barnabas," claims that his death came when a noose was placed around his neck and he was dragged by it until his tormentors set fire to him.³⁶ later introduced him to Peter in Caesarea. It is an interesting story, but it contains several statements that contradict the biblical record, such as Zacchaeus being a disciple of Peter and Peter being required by James (brother of the Lord) to send transcripts of all of his sermons and teachings back to Jerusalem for James to review. Most scholars date it no earlier than AD 240, over a hundred years after Clement of Rome died.

³⁵ Paul mentions Mark being with him in Colossians 4:10 and Philemon 24; Peter mentions Mark's presence in 1 Peter 5:13.

³⁶ As one can see by these two contradictory reports of the death of Barnabas, just because something is "traditionally believed," does not mean it is necessarily true. Another example is the death of Peter. Tradition holds that he was crucified upside-down, but the writing that records that tradition also says that a

The History of the Cyprus Church states that Barnabas was buried with a copy of Matthew's gospel.³⁷

About 400 years after the death of Barnabas, there was a writing circulating with the name "The Gospel of Barnabas," which is only known only because it was condemned as heresy³⁸ (no copies of it are known to exist today). Barnabas' name was later blasphemed by Muslims who produced a writing called "The Gospel of Barnabas" which said Jesus wasn't the Son of God, but just a prophet who wasn't really crucified, and it mentions Mohammad by name.³⁹ talking cross that was as tall as the clouds came out of Jesus' tomb. It makes for a nice story, and there may be truth to the manner of Peter's death, but it is impossible to state it with any certainty.

³⁸ The Decretum Gelasianum lists this "Gospel of Barnabas" as apocryphal and condemns it.

³⁹ This work is often referenced by Muslims as evidence of their beliefs and teachings about Jesus. The only manuscripts known to exist are in Spanish and Italian, and neither one is older than the 1500s. In it, Barnabas is one of the twelve apostles, clearly contradicting the inspired Scriptures.

What Ever Happened to Shepherding?

By Jamie Beller

Among the saddest words spoken of Christ are those recorded in Matthew 9:36: “But when He saw the multitudes, He was moved with compassion because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd.”¹ While the statement, “as sheep having no shepherd,” was made of the multitudes, perhaps the statement could be said of far too many congregations of God’s people today.

Of all the leadership models that Christ could have chosen for His church, He chose shepherding. Sadly however, in many instances the shepherding model has been abandoned for other leadership models. Whatever happened to shepherding as the leadership model utilized in many congregations? Before emphasizing how we restore shepherding, perhaps we must first recognize the reality that in many congregations the shepherding model has either never existed, or it has been abandoned.

...a man who refuses to do the work of a shepherd is just as disqualified...as a man who does not meet the qualifications to be a shepherd.

The Reality

For some congregations the reality is that shepherding has never existed, or that it existed at one time but has since been abandoned. Oh, there are, in some cases, men in the role of shepherds, but who neglect the responsibility of shepherding. Quite frankly, a man who refuses to do the work of a shepherd is just as disqualified to serve as a shepherd as a man who does not meet the qualifications to be a shepherd. That in mind, perhaps one reason shepherding has been abandoned is that emphasis has been placed on the requirements to be a shepherd to the neglect of emphasizing the responsibilities of a shepherd. Emphasizing one does not preclude the emphasis of the other.

...perhaps one reason shepherding has been abandoned is that emphasis has been placed on the requirements to be a shepherd to the neglect of emphasizing the responsibilities of a shepherd.

Concerning the responsibilities of shepherds, the apostle Paul, in addressing the elders at Ephesus, declared, “Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Spirit hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which He purchased with His own blood. For this I know, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.” (Acts 20:28-29). Two of the greatest responsibilities that shepherds have are (1) providing for the flock and, (2) protecting the flock. If shepherds fail to provide and protect the flock, they are just as responsible for the ignorance, division, and destruction of the flock as the flock is (Heb. 13:17).

Another reality concerning the abandonment of the shepherding model is that the task of shepherding has been delegated to the preacher. In his excellent work, Shepherds, Wake Up! brother J.J. Turner suggests that “Perhaps the model has been abandoned because the task of shepherding has been given to the full-time man on the staff—but who has no authority—whom we lovingly call minister”² A preacher is not hired to do the work of the shepherds, or any other member for that matter. Unfortunately, the sad reality in some cases is that congregational expectations for the work of the preacher supersede the scriptural expectations concerning the work of the preacher. As a result, the preacher is often expected to not only do the work of an evangelist, but also the work of an elder, while also doing his work as a Christian.

Still another reality that exists is that in some congregations is that there are “faithful men” who “lead” the congregation, but none who shepherd the congregation. This seems to be true among congregations without elders. As a result, hours and hours are spent by “faithful men” discussing the budget and building with little time being spent discussing the body. A further result—though perhaps unintentional—is that in too many instances congregations encourage a system that is often decried and deemed denominational—the pastoral system.

Regardless of why shepherding has either never existed, or why shepherding has been abandoned, the reality and result is that in many instances the “sheep are without shepherds.”

The Role of Shepherding

While great emphasis is often placed upon the requirement to become a shepherd (1 Timothy 3), how much emphasis do we place of the role and responsibility of shepherding? To appreciate the role of shepherding, consider lessons learned from the Chief Shepherd. Psalm 23 provides wonderful lessons that can be learned by both shepherds and sheep.

The Lord is my shepherd. Both shepherds and sheep ought to appreciate the personal relationship that they have with the Chief Shepherd. Shepherds and sheep alike should always work to strengthen that relationship.

I shall not want. When shepherds are caring for the sheep like the Chief Shepherd, there should not be a need among the sheep—the shepherd should be providing for them.

He leads me beside the still waters. Just as the Chief Shepherd provides His sheep with peace, so shepherds ought to ensure a peaceful environment for the sheep whom they lead.

He restoreth my soul. Like the Chief Shepherd, shepherds are to be actively interested and involved in restoring the souls of the sheep whom they lead. (Note: It is a sad commentary when a sheep can be astray for several weeks before the shepherds realize it enough to do something about it).

He leadeth me in paths of righteousness for His name's sake. In order for shepherds to lead their sheep in the paths of righteousness, not only must they know the path of righteousness, they must also be an example of those who are walking the paths of righteousness (1 Peter 5:2-3).

It should be no surprise that the relationship between the sheep and the preacher is closer than the relationship between the sheep and the shepherds if, during the times of trials and tragedies, shepherds neglect [their] responsibility and delegate it to the preacher.

Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death...Thou art with me. Shepherds are not merely supervisors of the sheep, they are companions with the sheep, especially when the sheep suffer times of trial and tragedy. (Note: It should be no surprise that the relationship between the sheep and the preacher is closer than the relationship between the sheep and the shepherds if, during the times of trials and tragedies, shepherds neglect this responsibility and delegate it to the preacher).

Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. The sheep are comforted by the presence of the rod (an instrument used for protection of the flock), and the staff (an instrument used to catch the sheep from falling).

Thou preparest a table before me. Being that feeding the flock is one of the responsibilities of shepherds, it should always be that the shepherds ensure that the sheep are properly fed.

Thou anoinest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Just as shepherds of old soothed the wounds their sheep suffered, so shepherds today should be a source of joy and encouragement to their sheep who have been wounded by life. Of such joy and encouragement there should be no limits.

² J.J. Turner, Shepherds, Wake Up! (Huntsville, AL: Publishing Designs, Inc. 2005, p.32.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life. The greatest responsibility that shepherds have toward the sheep whom they lead is leading their sheep in God's will, which results in the goodness and mercy of God, and ultimately in the sheep dwelling in the house of the Lord forever.

Certainly there is much that shepherds and sheep can learn from the Chief Shepherd which will positively impact the relationship between themselves as well as the relationship that exists with the Chief Shepherd. As a shepherd, the greatest responsibility that exists is to strengthen the relationship with the Chief Shepherd and the sheep.

The Restoration of Shepherding

If shepherding has never existed, or has seemingly been abandoned in the congregation of which we are members, how can we bring about its restoration? Such a question is to be answered by sheep and shepherds.

1. Emphasize not only the requirements to become a shepherd, but also the responsibilities of being a shepherd (Again, one who does not desire the responsibilities of being a shepherd is just as disqualified from serving as the one who does not desire the office of a shepherd).

2. Engage in the study of sheep and shepherding, as well as the work of shepherding as modeled by Jesus. (Too often, leadership exists as a result of what and how it's "always been done," rather than an extensive and intensive study of God's Word on shepherding.)
3. Encourage those who serve as shepherds to be just that—shepherds. Encourage shepherds to develop the heart of a shepherd.

Conclusion

It cannot be overstated just how much shepherding is needed in the Lord's church today. Sadly, in many places shepherding has either never existed, or it has been abandoned for various reasons. The result of such is that many members seemingly become as "sheep having no shepherd." Now shepherds, imagine meeting with the Chief Shepherd to give an account of the sheep over whom you had oversight (Heb. 13:17). What kind of account will you give? As sheep, what kind of an account would we expect the shepherds to give? Answering these questions is made much easier when shepherding exists, because for those who are shepherding, it is always about pleasing the Chief Shepherd and providing for the sheep.

Paul Darst: A Novel

(By Daniel R. Lucas)

[Note: D. R. Lucas served as a lieutenant and chaplain during the Civil War, and went on to preach the gospel in Iowa and Indiana for several years. He wrote the book The Conversion of Paul Darst in 1886 as an effort to reach more people with the gospel of Christ. It is a fascinating book, with many ideas and answers that Christians can use when speaking to others. For this reason, and the value of the book itself, we will be presenting it in installments in the Quarterly. Enjoy!]

Chapter One: An Open Question

Unconsciously to ourselves we measure the character of those around us. And the estimate we put upon the characters of others is sometimes an index to our own. This is especially true if we express the estimate we form in words. If we listen to one person dissect the character of another we are sure to form an estimate of the character of the speaker. This fact will often help us to account for the discrepancies that exist in the minds of different persons concerning the virtues or vices of those by whom they are surrounded. Our education also gives a tinge to the direction of our estimate. Hence it was an open question in the town of Bethel as to whether Albert Darst, the merchant, was a Christian or not, and the subject was one that caused much discussion in religious circles. He did not belong to any church, but his life was one against which very little of harm could be truthfully uttered. At the Mite Societies and Sewing Circles, the subject was always a disturbing element. Miss Penelope, who was a lady of some experience — although I cannot give her age, as she never volunteered to give it and no one ever had the courage to ask her — was very outspoken in her criticisms of his course and boldly denied that he was a Christian. When called upon for a reason, she would answer in a peculiar curt way she had when any one implied a doubt about her infallibility:

“I know he’s not a Christian, for he even went so far as to criticize a sermon delivered by our preacher on the final perseverance of the saints, and I know that any man who would find fault with the preaching of our minister is not a Christian. He even said that a soul would starve to death on the dogmas — husks, he called them — that came from our pulpit — as though the decrees of God and the things done ‘in the secret counsels of his own will’ were not the things for a man to preach! He says he wants him to preach Jesus in his life-work of doing good, as though a man could do something to save himself, or that any would be saved except those God elected from all eternity. The idea that a man can be a Christian and criticize these blessed doctrines when preached by so good a man as Rev. Mr. Fate, our preacher, is absurd.”

When Miss Penelope said “absurd,” in her peculiar style, it seemed an end of all controversy, and her little speech caused quite a flutter in the circle where it was delivered, but no one seemed disposed to take the matter up.

All eyes turned, however, to the widow Ingraham, who was present; for it had been rumored that Mr. Darst, who was a widower, had called on her once or twice, and the gossips were busy with their suggestions of probabilities. As if anticipating the movement, but without any sign of embarrassment, Mrs. Ingraham said very quietly and pleasantly:

“I do not know whether Mr. Darst is a Christian or not, but there is a little matter that I feel injustice to him I ought to state. You remember last winter when Mr. George, the carpenter, fell from my house, where he was doing a kind act for me in repairing the roof, and broke his limb; the family was left in quite a destitute situation. I did not have much but I felt if I could help them I would like to do it, so I went over to inquire about their condition, when they told me they were provided for, that Mr. Darst had paid their rent and furnished them provisions enough to do them until Mr. George would be able to work again; but I must not say anything about it as Mr. Darst would not like it. Many other such cases have come to my knowledge accidentally, and although Mr. Darst may not be a Christian, I think there is as much Christianity in feeding the hungry and assisting the unfortunate as there is in long prayers and sermons on the decrees of God.”

The company was somewhat astonished at the audacity of the widow in the last remark; but, if the truth must be told, rather pleased that the challenge of Miss Penelope had been so deftly taken up. The latter saw this, and in a milder tone than usual, said:

“I will not quarrel about that, but there is one thing I guess not even Mrs. Ingraham will call in question, and that is the fact that Mr. Darst has not properly reared his family in the way they should go, for Solomon said, ‘Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it,’ and now just look at his son Paul, notwithstanding he’s named after the great Apostle who taught the comforting doctrine of election and reprobation, ‘without any faith or foresight on the part of the creature,’ as our Confession of Faith says, he is a complete infidel. This you all know, so that even Rose Leyden, though she does deny the decrees and belongs to the Methodists, has refused to keep company with him anymore, because he is such a notorious infidel. He has gone so far as to say that Tom Paine wrote more sense in his “Rights of Man” and “Age of Reason,” than our minister preached in his pulpit. Now, if Albert Darst is a Christian, why is it that he has not taught his son to know better; that is what I don’t think anybody can answer.”

As she uttered the last words, she arose preparatory to her departure, determined that no one should have a chance to reply, if any desired to do so. Judge her not too hastily, dear reader, you have seen but one side of her character as yet, and appearances are often deceptive. The Sewing Circle broke up that day before any other character beside that of Mr. Darst could be dissected, though the fact that such an intelligent, earnest, and promising a young man as Paul Darst should be so outspoken an infidel was a source of much regret to all present.

Chapter Two: Bethel

Why the town of which I am writing was called Bethel is a question I cannot answer. The ancient Bethel was where Jacob saw the ladder reaching up to heaven with the angels ascending and descending upon it, and I have heard it said that when the “old settlers” founded the town, a large stone in the shape of a pillar was found, which recalled the ancient history and they called the new location Bethel. But, you inquire, “what’s in a name?” Very much! The celebrated Bacon once said “the world is ruled by names,” and they play an important part in the history of our race. The study of the origin of names is one of peculiar interest to the antiquarian, and names often betray the character, politics or religion of a people. The names of persons from various trades, such as Smith, Miller, Farmer, Tanner, Potter, and Merchant; of colors, such as Black, Brown, White and Green; of peculiarities, such as Bright, Keen, Sharp, Meek, Rich, Good, Strong, and Smart, are so familiar that we scarcely ever stop to think of their origin. Animals also have transferred their cognomens; hence we find Lyon, Badger, Roe, Hart, Hare, Wolf, Cat, etc., though I do not now remember ever to have known a man by the name of Dog, and though I would not slander my fellowmen, yet I have known some men that the name might not have been an altogether inappropriate suggestion of possibilities. I read once of two lawyers, Uriah Ketchum and Isaac Cheatham, who formed a co-partnership and called upon a painter to prepare them a sign. He cut his board a little too short and could only paint, “U. Ketchum & I. Cheatham.” The lawyers were not exactly pleased, but the people did not consider it an extraordinary departure from the facts in the case. Men may not think much of names, but a patriot would hardly name his child Benedict Arnold or Aaron Burr, or a Christian call his offspring Thomas Paine. If you find a child named John Wesley, you may be certain that his parents are the methodic followers of that worthy personage. A Presbyterian will probably name his child Calvin much sooner than he would Servetus.

At a town meeting once held in the Hoosier State, it was found impossible to select a name to suit all parties. Names had been presented and rejected, until the chairman, who was the lamented Elder George Campbell, a pioneer preacher of Indiana, and one of the purest, plainest, and most amiable preachers of his generation, was beginning to despair of success, when he called on the village physician, a somewhat poetical personage, to suggest something. The Doctor had been reading Longfellow, and suggested “Hiawatha” as a symphonious appellation. The suggestion was hardly made before the chairman, in his disgust, using a phrase well known in western parlance, exclaimed, “O, get away, get away!” “That’s it!” exclaimed several bystanders, “let us call it Gitaway,” and “Gitaway” it is even unto this day. Efforts have been made to bury the name under another, but such is the power of a name that it still lives.

If Bethel has any such history I know it not, what I have heretofore given being the sum of my knowledge in the premises. I know that many years ago when the Mississippi valley was being settled, the town was located, and there being no “milk sickness” near and the people only having the “chills” once a year — though some scoffers said that was all the time — and immigration from the east and south setting in, the town soon became a thriving and prosperous one. Where a few years before, the Indian roamed unmolested in the pursuit of game, in his primitive barbarism, now may be seen stores, shops, churches, and school-houses, and the prouder portion of the inhabitants delight to call the place the “City of Bethel.”

Chapter Three: The Class-Mates

The town of Bethel was honored as the location of the Scott University, a celebrated institution of learning, and the college was the boast and pride of the place. The students were many of them of superior ability, and remarkable for their moral deportment. One class especially attracted much attention from the faculty and community. They were very warm friends, though it was the wonder of every person how this could be the case, owing to the dissimilarity in their education, especially in their religious opinions. The tie between “chums” and class-mates is, however, a very strong one, engaged in the same studies and recitations, meeting together with perfect freedom from restraint, the elements of discord generally give way to those of amity and harmony.

Aaron Wingood, the eldest, was the son of a Presbyterian elder who was an enthusiastic Calvinist. He fully believed that to leave his children without a knowledge of “Divine Sovereignty,” was to throw them upon the world without a protection against the temptations and vicissitudes of life. Consequently the catechism was Aaron’s study from his earliest years, to which was added as he grew older the Confession of Faith, and works explanatory of that system of predestination and fatalism. Unconsciously to himself, therefore, Wingood was fully indoctrinated before his mind reached its maturity and he complacently believed his system of faith to be impregnable to any assault that could be made upon it and prided himself on the strong position he occupied. He was ready at all times to defend the faith of his fathers with a most commendable zeal.

William Lanire was the antipode of Aaron in many respects. His parents were Wesleyans in all their religious thoughts and actions, and used all the diligence of fond parents to impress upon the mind of their son the tenets in which they so profoundly believed. It is scarcely necessary to say that both in early infancy had been “dedicated to the Lord” in an act which to their parents was one of earnest religious feeling. The name of God had been called upon them in connection with their own, long ere their own lips could lisp it, by men who, with conscientious devotion, ministered in what they deemed holy things.

The dispositions of the two young men were as opposite as had been their religious training. Aaron was habitually sedate and calm, while William, easily ruffled in spirits, was sometimes gay and buoyant, at others sad and melancholy.

Job Baines, an uneducated philosopher of Bethel, was in the habit of saying: “William Lanire is a illustration of Paul Darst’s new theory that he and Unruh Henry has been inventin’ out of the materials Darwin has lately been presentin’, that this earthly tabernacle controls the inhabitant of it, instead of the inhabitant controlling the tabernacle, for he is one day onto the top of Mount Pisgah with Moses, viewing the land of promise, and the next one he is into the Slough of Despond along with Bunyan, so deep he can’t see the main road, when its corduroyed through the swamp, accordin’ to his digestive apparatus. If his dinner agrees with him, he’s lookin’ for the milk and honey land, if his stomachic machinations are disordered, he’s down among the roots and herbs of the miry way.”

Walter Belcamp, the third, was the son of Baptist parents who, though rejecting the theory of the other parents so far as the christening was concerned, yet carefully watched the spiritual education of their son, leading him to early imbibe their religious sentiments. On coming to a proper age it had been decided by the church of their “faith and order” that Walter had experienced the necessary change of heart to make him a proper subject for reception into the church. His experience, it is true, had nothing remarkable about it, as he honestly told the assembled congregation, but that he desired to be a Christian, that he believed in Christ and desired to obey him. The elder who put the question of his reception to vote made a short speech in his favor, in a sort of apologetic way, showing that as Walter had never been into the greater depths of sin, it was not to be expected that his deliverance would be so marked and well-defined as those who had been long engaged in the practice of sin. He was then received without a dissenting vote, and the next day was baptized, being from that time forward a persistent and earnest advocate of the teachings of the church with which he was identified.

Scott Harvey, the fourth, was educated somewhat differently from either of the others. His father had been reared after the straightest sect of the Calvinists, but had in his later years, under what he called the “liberty of the gospel,” become an ardent disciple of the teachings of a class of liberalists, of which we might mention the able and distinguished Henry Ward Beecher as a representative. While he clung with great tenacity to his own way of thinking and church, he with equal freedom gave everybody else the same right, so far as both divine and human authority extended, to have their own way. Scott therefore became an advocate of what he called “liberty,” and being opposed to clerical government, in fact it might almost be said any government at all, he became an uncompromising Congregationalist.

Paul Darst, the fifth, was an Infidel, whose experience will be found in another chapter.

Chapter Four: A Protracted Meeting

Every town has them. All churches use them as instrumentalities. In their proper use they are legitimate, and often a necessary adjunct to the successful preaching of the gospel. It has “pleased the Lord by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe,” and “the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to those who believe.” Bethel had protracted meetings, in fact Job would say that “Bethel had a little of everything from a fandango to lectures by professors that know so much no one can understand them.” Whether the protracted meetings of Bethel were legitimate is not for us to determine. It is our duty to describe one as a specimen. What a relief it is to the writer to give the facts without being compelled to form or say what the opinion of his readers shall be. The description of a protracted meeting is not, however, an easy task, for nearly everybody has been there, and if a mistake is made somebody will be sure to complain, and the master of such ceremonies will be sorely displeased. It was decided to hold a protracted meeting, and the Rev. Blackstone Dickens came from a neighboring city to direct the exercises. I would not do him injustice, but I must say he took great pride in the title Reverend. Beecher says small men need titles, but Beecher is not altogether reliable. He boasted that he was an old fashioned Methodist, some of the profane said he was a “hickory,” others a “sycamore,” and I incline to think the latter right, for I once read a fairy story where a sycamore tree was the abode of owls, spooks, ghosts, and hobgoblins, and Rev. Dickens could conjure up more wild, weird, spectral ghost stories to frighten sinners and get up more excitement with marvelous tales than any man I ever heard, except the Rev. Edwin Payson Hammond. His lungs were of the best Bessemer steel, and he could shout glory in all the tones, from the falsetto to the thorough bass, and continue from dark until midnight with an increasing volume all the time. He claimed to have received a special divine call to preach the gospel — the Lord speaking to him from a bright fiery cloud at noonday. His reputation was such that all the rest of the churches in town concluded it was policy to assist him. How strange it is that division is regarded as right among sectarians, but they must unite to convert sinners. They laid aside their differences until after the meeting, when they began to preach their peculiarities again and each tried to get as many of the converts as possible. I am sorry to say it, but there was more bickering and strife over the division of the converts than would have been possible between the servants of Abraham and Lot.

His first sermon was entitled “a Prayer Meeting in Hell”...

The work of the meeting was divided under the direction of Rev. Dickens. He took it upon himself to preach the terrors of the Law, and the thunders of Mount Sinai, to uncap perdition to the gaze of sinners that they might see the awful consequences of sin. His first sermon was entitled, a “Prayer Meeting in Hell,” and the “rattling among the dry bones” was like a tempest among the leaves of autumn. His next was the “Undying Worm,” and the result was he soon had a number of sinners rushing forward and kneeling at the “Altar of Prayer,” as it is denominated, crying to God for mercy, feeling that they were on the verge of an awful precipice, and unless rescued everlasting death was their portion. He did his part of the work well. If ever a sinner was shown the awful nature and consequences of sin, and the certainty of the punishment, the sinners of Bethel most assuredly understood it. As soon as the sinners were ready, then the work of the others commenced, the work assigned to the other preachers and the people. Their work was to get the Lord ready. Prayers loud, long, and vociferous were uttered, prayers of pleading penitence, prayers of commanding authority for the “Lord to come down now, just now, do Lord, and speak peace to these lost souls,” until prayer, confessions, shoutings of glory by the old saints, thundering amens from the preachers, clapping of hands and a babel of voices were indescribable. Some were crying, some were laughing, and the excitement rose to an intense height. But no matter how high it rose, the Rev. Dickens, like the pilot at the wheel amid the storm, calmly surveyed and overlooked the scene. He shouted glory, prayed with stentorian voice, rubbed his hands, sung a song, and talked with the mourners; but that self-command which comes from habitually passing through such scenes never deserted him. When the excitement reached its highest pitch, someone started a song, one of those sweet and pathetic melodies, born in heaven, but with words often as senseless as a Buddhistic mass. This was the signal for a general hand-shaking, during which a general exhortation was indulged in, each one going about the audience as he desired.

Bethel had a man who was always conspicuous if not useful on such occasions. He was not a bad man, and I do not know that he could be called a good one. He was a regular protracted meeting professor and joined the church regularly at every revival. As long as the storm continued and the fire seemed to burn, he was faithful and ever at his post. No night was so dark, no path so muddy, but what he was always at the meeting, the first to arrive and the last to leave, always active and awake; but he was so constituted — by nature or practice, I do not know which, perhaps both — that he could not live or make any progress in his religious life without some excitement, and like a thermometer he sometimes went down “mighty sudden,” as Job would say. His name was Updown, but Job always called him Up-and-down. That worthy personage once remarked: “If all the preachers git a star in their crown for every convert they make, Mr. Up-and-down will make about twenty stars, for he’s jined the church annually since he’s had a bein’ in this town, but he never lasts more than three months, then he’s ready for another big meetin.’ Big meetin’s is Up’s best forty.” Mr. Updown was always possessed about the time of a big meeting with the idea that he was called to exhort, and so he never lost an opportunity. Whenever the hand-shaking commenced was his time. He sprang suddenly to his feet and shouted, “Glory, glory, glory!” Then seizing the Rev. Dickens in his arms, he exclaimed:

“Why, Bro. Dickens, why don’t you holler glory louder?” “GLORY! GLORY!” responded the good brother in tones that seemed to jar the house. Then turning to the audience, Mr. Updown began to exhort! “Glory! I never was half so happy! Why, brethren, I can’t tell you half — I see right up into glory! When I get up there I will tell you all about it! O, sinners, O, beloved sinners, O, lovely sinners, O, degraded sinners, come with me to glory! I’m just off for glory! Come and get religion, it’s the only thing that will do you any good. I used to be very wicked, but the Lord has delivered me. I was converted by dreams. I had many frightful ones, before I got the right one. I dreamed the devil came after me and got hold of me several times. Once I thought he caught me, and oh! a most miserable creature I was! I knew not what to do; but I thought I called upon the Lord to be delivered from him. I thought the devil mocked me, repeating the same words that I had used, though I was delivered from his clutches by the Lord. I woke up terribly frightened, but I thought it was an evidence of my acceptance with God, and I was so happy I began to shout his praises. This did well for a time and I was so happy, but I began to fall into doubts again. My nights were disturbed again by horrible dreams, and I began to think I was not converted, but another time I dreamed the world was on fire. It seemed that everything would be burned up. I could see no way of escape for me. While I was in this dreadful situation someone came and took me up between the heaven and the earth out of the way of the burning. I thought it was my Savior. Oh! How thankful I felt for my deliverance! And I have never had a doubt since that I was truly and soundly converted.”

When he had finished, Mr. Dickens said very earnestly, “Who now can doubt that God converts men, though we may not all understand it, when we have the evidence of such powerful conversions before us!” A number of others followed Mr. Updown in like strain until near midnight, when all except the most zealous began to leave for home, preparatory to a like scene on the following night.

Some reader may doubt this narrative, but the exhortation of Mr. Updown is a verbatim report made by a stenographer, and is exact.

As I express no opinion, I will close the chapter with the opinion of a few of those present:

Mr. Dickens called it a “powerful work of grace among the people, a special interposition of the miraculous converting power of God.”

Unruh Henry, the Atheist, said “he thought a little less supper would be a good thing for Mr. Updown. His dreams would thereby be improved.”

Miss Penelope “thought it was all right but it might interfere with the ‘decrees,’ but if it did it was decreed that it should be so.”

Job said, “I do hope Up-and-down will stick this time for he borrowed five dollars of me.”

Job was of the earth, earthy.

Albert Darst, the merchant, went home, took down his Bible and read the following: “How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophecy lies? Yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart; which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbor, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal. The prophet that hath a dream let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord.” — Jeremiah 23:26-28.

Funny and Not-So-Funny Events in the Life of Elijah Martindale

by Bradley S. Cobb

Elijah Martindale is a name that most people are completely unfamiliar with. This is sad, because his history is actually quite interesting. He was raised by a Baptist mother, and his father joined with that religion when Elijah was ten years old. Later on, Elijah, after studying his Bible, understood that he needed to be baptized, but he staunchly refused to join the Baptist Church because he could not agree with their creeds. As a result, none of the Baptist preachers would baptize him. It wasn't until a Seventh-Day Baptist missionary came into the area that he was able to get someone to baptize him.

After his baptism, he began visiting different churches to see which one taught the Bible, and not the doctrines of man. As a result of his search, he joined the “Newlight church,” or as it was more commonly known, the “Christian church,” which was associated with Barton W. Stone. Elijah began to preach, but his upbringing caused him to only preach faith as a prerequisite to salvation. Upon studying the Bible more, he found that no one was saved in the New Testament without being baptized, and he began to preach the gospel in its original purity.

This got him kicked out of the Newlight church.

However, after a period of a few years, almost the entire congregation had become convinced of the truth of what Elijah was preaching, and were immersed into Christ.

He was a frequent companion of Elder Samuel Rogers, and in one location while this pair was working together, two men, Benjamin and Daniel Franklin, came forward, made the good confession, and were baptized by lantern-light. Elder Benjamin Franklin went on to become one of the most powerful and influential writers and preachers of the mid and late 1800s.

Much could be said about the work of brother Martindale, but we want to share with you some stories of his adventures as a minister of God, direct from his pen.

Mistaken Identity

I visited the Middletown or Fall Creek [Indiana] church once a month for some years. I remember one time during the busy season I was compelled to make the journey, nearly fifteen miles, on foot. I set out early in the morning, stopping to rest at a cabin near where the village of Cadiz now stands. I then pursued my journey until I reached Israel Personet's, not far from the place of my destination. I had several times stopped with him, and was always made to feel at home. I supposed the little children, who were the only occupants of the house when I arrived, knew me. As I felt greatly exhausted with my long walk and fasting, I walked to a bed and lay down to rest until the parents would return. One of the children ran to where her uncle was plowing in the field and told him a drunk man had come to their house and gone to bed. The man hastened to come to their rescue. I had fallen into a sweet slumber, but was waked by a heavy tread on the floor, and, looking up, saw a man staring intently at me to make out who the intruder was. He soon knew me and laughed heartily at the joke.

An Interesting Way to Support the Preacher

[A]s it has been with every faithful watchman who stood upon the walls of Zion, there were troubles brewing for me. It came in this way: There were a number of the brethren who were leading members that I never could persuade to quit the use of ardent spirits as a beverage, both for themselves and families. After a while the devil or some of his servants put it into the head of one of the members to start a distillery. By this time the brethren had purchased a small farm near the meeting-house for the use of a preacher. They wanted a resident pastor, but in this they failed, so they concluded to rent the parsonage farm and apply the proceeds to pay for preaching, for now the idea was beginning to be common that the laborer was absolutely worthy of his hire. They rented the farm, taking grain rent and turning the grain over to the brother who ran the distillery to be made into whisky and enable the brethren to pay the preacher.

The “Erring” Preacher?

I went to a temperance meeting and when the pledge was passed I placed my name on record as an abstinence man. I told the people I believed the Gospel was pledge enough if it was lived up to, but I found so many professors [of religion] that failed to keep the pledge of temperance I thought it my duty to let the world know that I was an abstainer [because of my] religious principles. Moreover, I wanted to give every assistance in my power to stop the awful ravages of the demon of intemperance.

My brethren at home found no fault with me for enrolling myself in the temperance movement. Not so at Hillsboro. The news went from lip to lip “Bro. Martindale has joined a temperance society. What must be done?” It was decided to send some five or six of the brethren to labor with me and try to reclaim the erring brother. They came; and such another day’s controversy I never want again. They took dinner with me and we parted. Sometime afterward I sent an appointment to preach on the subject at their meeting-house on Sunday afternoon. I went and preached Saturday evening and Sunday morning. At the close of our morning services a brother arose and stated that the afternoon discourse could not be preached in that house as agreed by the church. I felt a strange sensation come over me while I yet stood in the pulpit, a feeling I never had experienced in a stand for divine worship and hope I never will again. I didn’t say much in retort, but announced that I would make the speech in the adjoining grove. So we dispersed.

“[Temperance] was considered too unholy a subject to occupy the Lord’s house on the Lord’s day.

While we were at dinner, several of the brethren insisted that I had better not go on to make the speech, but let a Brother Hendrix who was present talk a while to the people in the house. I yielded to their entreaty but never felt sure that I did right. The brethren told me some time after this that I could have the house on weekday to preach temperance, as it was considered too unholy a subject to occupy the Lord’s house on the Lord’s day.

After my temperance meeting at Little Blue River (for that was the name they gave the church) I didn’t often attend at that place. Although time and patience have healed the wound, it left an ugly scar. Take it all in all, it was one of the hardest trials I was ever called to bear. One brother, and one only, came and confessed his fault like a Christian. He is gone home, and I hope all of them will repent of their sins and get home to the good world.

Things Haven’t Changed...

In those days, preaching against the sin of intemperance or slavery was condemned on the ground that it was mixing politics with religion. There are many in the church today who will not be pleased unless these great sins are entirely ignored in the work of the ministry.

Father, My Heart

(by Deserae Cobb, age 11)

Thanks for my life, and all I share it with,
You're number one in my life, not the fifth.

I will never have to fear, for Lord,
I know that you are near, Lord.

Please help me not to fight,
Because I am a Christian, and now see the light.

Please bless one day I will be a mother,
And teach my children to love one another.

Help me spread your inspired will,
So many good people may spiritually heal.

When I must face my chilling death,
My words will be with my last dying breath,

"I have done my best to run a good race,
And helped others to see His grace."

But while I am stuck here in the world,
At least I will know we still have your word.

I am stuck on earth, doing old chores,
But Father, my heart will always be yours.

I Will Live My life for You

(By Deserae Cobb)

God knows the difference between right and wrong,
We should live for Him, though our lives are long,

We've suffered here for many years,
Though Jesus went through more than tears,

They whipped Him and beat Him until He died,
Then they shoved a spear through His side,

But now He's up on God's right side,
Up in heaven so fair and bright,

Trust and obey, we can go too,
Lord I will live my life for you.

Sons and Daughters of Encouragement

by Gerald Cowan

There was a time when the cure for overly exuberant spirits was to douse the person repeatedly with cold water, especially useful for the mentally ill, but not exclusively for them. Hence the expression: “to throw cold water” on something or someone. We may refer to one who discourages others as a “wet blanket.” We have other expressions which mean essentially the same as discourage: Take the wind out of his sails. Let the steam out of him. Put a damper on his spirits. Take him down a notch or two. All of them mean about the same and have the same result: they are an effective cure for enthusiasm, optimism, or any kind of “high spirits.”

Christians ought to be like Joses, a Levite from Cyprus, a Christian who had such a good attitude about encouraging others that the apostles nicknamed him Barnabas (Acts 4:36-37). Bar-nabas means son of exhortation (consolation, encouragement). Beth-nabas would mean daughter of encouragement. I once read of a soldier who was discharged from service because he discouraged so many of his fellow-soldiers. He could be called “a son of discouragement.” Every Christian should be a “son or daughter of encouragement,” because Christians are instructed to encourage (exhort, provoke) each other to love and good works (Heb. 10:24). The fact is, “children of discouragement” are able to “throw cold water” and “dampen the enthusiasm” of “children of encouragement.” I will show you how it can be done, so you will not do it and so you will recognize it when somebody else is doing it.

Part One:

Some Effective Tools Used by

Sons and Daughters of Discouragement.

Things That Limit or Destroy Enthusiasm.

Pessimism. Looking on the dark side of everything, focusing on the difficulties and disadvantages rather than the possibilities and goals. A pessimist is not surprised when things go wrong; he was expecting it. If things turn out well he is surprised; it was just luck. It probably won't happen again. The pessimist insists on a guarantee of success before undertaking any project. He never does anything by faith. He can't believe what he can't see (2 Cor. 5:17).

Worry. Worry is a special form of pessimism, or perhaps the result of pessimism; always expecting trouble to materialize. It is the dread of “what may happen.” Worry is always about future consequences of past or present events and circumstances. Justifiable concern is what keeps us involved in doing right things in the present – to prevent bad things from happening in the future. But unreasonable anxiety about what may or may not happen is contrary to the will and teaching of Christ. The antidote for worry is simple: do right and trust God (Mt. 6:34, Phil. 4:6-9)

Suspicion. Lack of confidence and trust in others, expecting the worst, looking for hidden motives that will disprove apparently good attitudes and actions. Some works are never started because we are sure, “Nobody will do what it takes” or “If they do work they won't stay with it long enough to get the job done.” Why can't we heal the hurts and bridge the gaps that separate us from other racial, ethnic, political, or social groups? Sometimes it is, “Because people in my own group will get the wrong impression (be suspicious of me).”

Fault-Finding – Complaining – Accusation – Gossip, repeating charges made by others. Complaints are often based upon prejudice and personal preference. People enjoy putting others down and so they are willing to repeat complaints and accusations made by others, even when they are idle gossip. An accusation doesn't have to be true to be damaging. The fact that it is made will lead some to assume there must be some truth in it. Think of the false accusations made against Paul. He had to prove his innocence, prove himself not guilty as charged (Acts 22, 24, 26). The best example is Jesus Christ. Nobody could prove any charge of misconduct or sin against him (John 8:46) but he was crucified because of false accusations of wicked persons. Is that discouraging? Here's something more to consider: Jesus said if you stand with him you will receive the same treatment given to him, and it was said in a strictly negative context (John 15:18-21, Mt. 5:10-12).

Evasion – Blame-shifting – Excuse-making. Evasion can mean trying to avoid the issue by refusing to say what you really mean. When a person refuses to tell the truth or to stand firmly on what he believes to be the truth, it is very discouraging. Imagine how that could play out if a preacher, teacher, elder, or other leader practiced evasion, avoiding the truth and never taking a firm stand. Would it not foster suspicion, worry, and pessimism – discouragement? Legally, the Fifth Amendment to our nation's Constitution allows one to refuse to give self-incriminating evidence. In nearly everybody's mind, "taking the fifth" is a tacit admission of guilt. It is like saying, "I am guilty but you will have to prove it without a confession from me." Evasion often leads to some other discouraging actions. The most highly developed art of many sinners is the art of the alibi, the excuse, the claim that "it is not my fault." Somebody "made me do it," "I acted in good faith but somebody deceived me." Read the example of the first excuse-makers, Adam and Eve, in Genesis 3:12-13. Adam blamed Eve, Eve blamed the serpent – God blamed them all and found none of them innocent or excusable.

Compromise. "Give a little, take a little – be willing to bend. We can work something out that all of us can live with." When an arbitrator compromises with your adversary to your detriment do you feel betrayed and discouraged? If you are the compromiser, be aware that a doubtful, unstable, wavering, or double-minded person will receive nothing, including getting no respect from others and no approval from God (James 1:5-6).

Desertion. When a trusted person betrays and deserts you and a cause or a work you shared, it is hard to continue to feel good about the person. I am sure it pained Paul to say of a once-faithful co-worker, that, "Demas has forsaken me" (2 Tim. 4:10). I've often wondered how Paul felt about Barnabas the "son of encouragement" and their sharp contention that led Barnabas to separate from him and go his own way (Acts 15:36-40).

Ingratitude. Never pay any compliments for work well done. Never say thanks. Never give public recognition for achievement. Just treat people as though they should be glad to have the privilege of doing the work. Shakespeare said, "How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child." Remember the nine ungrateful lepers who disappointed the Lord who helped and healed them (Luke 17:16).

Doom and Gloom. Some seem to think rejoicing may "jinx" the future and things will get worse. That brings us full circle, back to our starting point, pessimism.

Conclusion to this part: Take a dim and pessimistic view of everything, worry about the outcome, don't trust anyone, evade the truth and avoid taking a firm stand, find someone else to take the blame for your mistakes, compromise and tolerate the ungodly and pamper the rebel, desert the weak and ignore those who suffer in silence, never show gratitude – take the path of least resistance in everything – then watch hearts break. Watch initiative and enthusiasm die. Of course we do not want to take that path! So, let's see how to be sons and daughters of encouragement.

Part Two:
Effective Tools Available to
Sons and Daughters of Encouragement.
Things that Promote and Enhance Enthusiasm

Optimism - Idealism. The optimist looks for good in everyone and everything, and expects to find it. He insists, "Things are seldom as bad as they seem. Things may be bad now, but it won't last forever." "It came to pass; it did not come to stay." He tells us that even the most difficult task can be accomplished if we work together with God.

Assurance. In everything God works for good together with those who love Him and are the called according to His purpose (Rom. 8:28). This does not mean all things are good. Some situations and events can never be called good on their own. It means no matter how bad things get, one can avoid being overcome by the situation; one can learn from it, and be stronger as a result. Something good – if not for yourself then for someone else – will come from it.

Confidence – Trust. Expecting the good and right reaction. Assuming that when one knows the truth he will accept and apply it (2 Cor. 8:22, Gal. 5:10, Phile. 21, Heb. 6:9).

Honesty - Realism. Say what you mean and mean what you say. Rom. 12:17b: Provide things honest in the sight of all. If one is always honest, there is no reason to doubt him. If one is honest, but mistaken, the proof of honesty is in his willingness to make appropriate corrections. It is the dishonest person who assumes that nobody else is honest.

Steadfastness - Dependability. Christians are to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord (1 Cor. 15:58). One should not be easily pushed away from his own steadfastness, and should not follow a multitude to do something that is not right (2 Peter 3:18, Exodus 23:2). Being steadfast in the faith makes it easier to resist the devil and temptation (1 Peter 5:8-9).

Loyalty – Faithfulness. Of course our first loyalty is to God. Compare Moses, in Heb. 11:24-27. We know also that God is dependable. He says, “Fear not, for I am with you” (Deut. 31:6-8, Heb. 13:5-6). Our brethren need to know that they can depend upon us to do what we say, to support and encourage them, etc.

Gratitude – Appreciation. Withholding it discourages the one who has done or is doing something needed or requested. When it is expressed and is genuine it increases enthusiasm in workers, givers, and receivers. We should be Always giving God thanks in everything (Phil. 4:6, Eph. 5:20). Gratitude is what makes any sacrifice justifiable, acceptable, and worthwhile. We need to learn to express gratitude at the proper time. Most of us regret not having spoken to someone now gone – what we want to say can no longer be said or heard by the one who needed to hear it. The next point is a follow-on from this one.

Approval – Compliment – Praise. Others will seldom assume that, unless you specifically say otherwise, you approve and are pleased. Compliments and praise must be genuine, coming from honest hearts. Sycophantic praise may sound good but it is not real, it is flattery. It will do more harm than good. A flattering mouth works ruin (Prov. 26:28). But a word spoken in due season – the right word spoken at the right time by the right person – how good it is (Prov. 15:23). It provides encouragement and incentive to continue.

Fellowship – Acceptance – Sharing. We are not alone, not separate or independent. We are interdependent. I am with you – I want you here and I need you. You are with me. You are not alone. We are in this together. The body is of many parts and not all parts are the same, but all the parts are needed and all are integrated into one body (1 Cor. 12:12-27).

Love should not be overlooked. Virtually everyone wants to be loved. We want affection. We want concern, sympathy, good will. But more than that we want the love that recognizes us as valuable, important, wanted, and worthy of what is given to us.

We recognize the importance of this kind of love when we reassure others that God loves them and wants them, and we love them and want them too. The love of God is probably the most frequent topic in outreach sermons and the most effective tool in evangelistic efforts. No one ever gets tired of hearing about how and why he is loved. Read John 3:16 and 1 John 4:7-12.

The love of God is probably ... the most effective tool in evangelistic efforts. No one ever gets tired of hearing about how and why he is loved.

Rejoicing. This is highly contagious – be careful or you’ll catch it! Rejoice in the Lord always; let your graciousness be apparent to all (Phil. 4:4). We should rejoice with those who rejoice (Rom. 12:15) – the fact that others have cause for rejoicing should be reason enough for us to rejoice too. Share your reasons for rejoicing in what God gives you, does for you, and does with you. Others will want to share with you and rejoice with you too.

Conclusion to this part: A cheerful, worry-free attitude which expects the best from everyone involved, an uncompromising honesty and a firm resolve to do the right thing, faithfulness and loyalty to others when we can serve them and gratitude toward others when they serve us – these things will create and sustain enthusiasm and promote its growth.

Nobody wants to be, or be associated with, a negative personality, a discourager of others.

Christians are expected to be, and want to associate with, a positive personality. In this, as in most things, you are what you choose to be, not something forced upon you. Christianity is also a choice, not something that can be forced upon you. Are you choosing to be a Christian? Are you choosing to be an encourager?

TABERNACLE SHADOWS

By Mark McWhorter

The Creation of the universe was recorded in less than two chapters. Creation is, of course, referenced many times in Scripture; and no one denies the importance of God's recorded message regarding the Creation.

Now, consider the importance of the Tabernacle and the instructions regarding it:

- Exodus has thirteen chapters devoted to it.
- Leviticus has eighteen.
- Numbers has thirteen.
- Deuteronomy has two.
- Hebrews has four.

That is a great deal of inspired material! God must have considered the Tabernacle of great importance.

When God gave Pharaoh two dreams, Genesis 41:32 says it was doubled because it was established by God and it would come to pass. This should impress on us that whatever the Tabernacle was about is established and came to pass.

It took six days for God to create the Universe. He spent forty days giving Moses the pattern for the Tabernacle and the Law.

Hebrews 10:1 tells us, “For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year, continually make the comers thereunto perfect.” The Law was a shadow. The Tabernacle was intimately connected with that Law and the sacrifices. Thus, it is involved with the shadows. Hebrews 9:24 states, “For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.” This reveals that the Tabernacle itself pictured the true spiritual things associated with Christ.

Jesus pushed this point in Luke 24:44, “These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which are written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me.” All things must be fulfilled in Christ. If God devoted nearly fifty chapters of the Old Testament to the details of the Tabernacle, there must be shadows of the true involved. A few verses earlier in Luke 24, Jesus stated, “Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself.”

The Tabernacle Not Permanent

The Tabernacle was never intended to be the perfection and end of Christ's building. “But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building,” (Hebrews 9:11). “Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man,” (Hebrews 8:1-2). “It was therefore necessary that the pattern of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these,” (Hebrews 9:23).

The Tabernacle was not intended to be a permanent dwelling for God any more than the physical presence on earth by Jesus was to be permanent. “The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth,” (John 1:14). The Greek word for ‘dwelt’ is the word for tabernacle. That dwelling was a temporary thing.

It should be noted that God dwells with man while the material world is in existence. Through Moses he commanded, “Let them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them,” (Exodus 25:8). In Exodus 29:46, he stated, “And they shall know that I am the Lord their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the Lord their God.” “...for I the Lord dwell among the children of Israel,” (Numbers 35:34). “Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, Lo, I come, and I dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord,” (Zechariah 2:10). God comes and dwells with man. This indicates direction. Man is on earth. God comes to man.

When the world is destroyed at the Judgment, then man dwells with God in heaven. “Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father’s house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also,” (John 14:1-3). Ecclesiastes 12:7 says that at death the spirit returns to God who gave it. Thus, when the earthly existence is over, the spirit leaves the earthly residence; the spirit goes to where God is. (These concepts of God dwelling with man, and of man dwelling with God, and the use of the Greek word for tabernacle, being a temporary dwelling, should be pondered when used by God in Scripture. For instance, it aids in understanding some of The Revelation.)

Meeting God is the Focus

It is of interest that God begins the description of the Tabernacle with the Ark of the Covenant. He is preeminent. He is the source and focus of all things. He gives the Tabernacle from His perspective. He intends that man understand: the end goal is at the Ark of the Covenant. Man normally begins his discussion of the Tabernacle from the outside and works inward. We start with our weaknesses and take our journey toward God.

Giving for the Tabernacle

The items for building the Tabernacle were given by the people. According to Exodus 25:1-7 and Exodus 35:4-9 they were to bring gold, silver, brass, blue, purple, scarlet, fine linen, goats’ hair, rams’ skins dyed red, badgers’ skins, shittim wood, oil for the light, spices for anointing oil, onyx stones, and stones to be set in the ephod and breastplate. The people willingly gave, according to Exodus 25:2. The things the poor gave were just as important as what the wealthy gave. These principles come forward to us today. 2 Corinthians 8:12, “For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.” In 2 Corinthians 8:3-4, we are told they gave beyond their power and pleaded that the gift be accepted. 2 Corinthians 9:7, “Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.”

The Israelites gave more than enough, Exodus 36:3, 5-7. That mindset involves recognizing God as the provider of all. 1 Chronicles 29:14, “But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? For all things come to Thee, and of Thine own have we given Thee.” It must be remembered that what the Israelites gave came from Egypt, Exodus 3:21-22; 11:2; 12:35-36). God had allowed them to receive all of it from the Egyptians before they left. The Egyptians were glad to give it to them, just as long as they left. (A side-light point is that the Israelites were not stealing from the Egyptians. The Egyptians had been withholding wages for quite some time. This was God’s way of giving them due wages and providing the necessities for the building of the Tabernacle. The word ‘borrow’ in Exodus 3:22 literally means ‘ask’ or ‘request.’) Even with the value of all that they gave for the Tabernacle, it could not come close to the value of the ONE who is figured in the Tabernacle. (At $1000 per ounce, the gold they gave would be worth $43,865,000.)

The Beauty of the Tabernacle

The beauty of the Tabernacle was representative of the glory of Christ and his church. “We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father...” (John 1:14). Peter writes that the apostles “were eyewitnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased” (2 Peter 1:16-17).

The Pattern of the Tabernacle

The Tabernacle was built according to the pattern God gave. Exodus 25:9, “According to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it.” Exodus 25:40, “And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was showed thee in the mount.” Other references to the pattern are Exodus 26:30; 27:8; Numbers 8:4; and Acts 7:44. Exodus 25-27 are chapters of command. Exodus 36-38 are chapters of obedience.

There is order in all that God commands. David acknowledged that order, and the breach of it, 1 Chronicles 15:13. Christians are told to keep order, 1 Corinthians 14:40. Christians have a pattern. “But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you,” (Romans 6:17). According to 2 Timothy 1:13, the pattern must be kept. Christians follow the example of Christ, 1 Peter 2:21.

Unless the Tabernacle was built according to God’s instructions, all was vain. Psalm 127:1, “Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. ...”

All the workers of the Tabernacle were involved in the pattern. Men were weavers, engravers, embroiderers, workman, etc., Exodus 35:25, 35. Women were spinners. There was work for everyone, even if the work was of different natures. The same holds true for members of the church. All are to work. No person’s work is more important than another’s, 1 Corinthians 12.

Names of the Tabernacle

It is called the Tabernacle of the Congregation in Exodus 27:21; Leviticus 1:1; Numbers 1:1 and Deuteronomy 31:14. There was only one Tabernacle for only one Congregation. God dwelled with that one Congregation. There were no divisions of faith or law. The same holds true for the Church. Matthew 16:18, “I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.” Ephesians 4 tells us that there is one Lord and one body and one faith.

It is called the Tabernacle of the Lord in 1 Kings 2:28 and Joshua 22:19 (the Lord’s Tabernacle). It was his. He would go with them, Deuteronomy 31:6; Joshua 1:9. In the same way, the church is God’s, 1 Corinthians 1:2.

It is called the Tabernacle of Testimony in Exodus 38:21; Numbers 1:50; and Numbers 17:10. The Ten Commandments were in the Ark. These were a testimony to his holiness, power and authority. The Rod of Aaron was a testimony of his care and spiritual reproductive power. The Pot of Manna was a testimony of his filling their needs. These all demonstrated God with them and over them. The church has the Scriptures which give his testimony, 1 Corinthians 2:1; 2 Timothy 1:8. The name is used in Revelation 15:5, “And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened.”

It is called the Tent of the Testimony in Numbers 9:15.

It is called the Tabernacle of Witness in Numbers 17:7-8; 2 Chronicles 24:6; and Acts 7:44 (Stephen used it in his sermon). It was first named this when the rods of all the tribes were placed in the Tabernacle to verify which tribe represented God. The rod was his witness, Numbers 17:10. The church is the witness of Christ. (This is not the way ‘witnessing’ is used by much of the professed Christian community.) John 15:16 has Christ speaking to the apostles regarding their carrying on his work. In 1 Peter 2:9, the church is told, “But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.”

It is called The Tent in Exodus 39:32-33, and 40. It was intended to be temporary. It was a tent for God to meet with man, Exodus 36:14. In Exodus 25:22 God stated that he would meet and commune with them there. God meets us if we are in the church. The church is a temporary entity that exists on earth. The church as a spiritual building will cease to exist at the Judgment. Those faithful in the church will continue to exist in their heavenly reward along with all the faithful from the beginning of time.

It is called the Sanctuary in Exodus 25:8. Psalm 77:13, “Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary.” “To see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary,” (Psalm 63:2). The Hebrew word ‘sanctuary’ means ‘a consecrated thing.’ Jesus is the High Priest and Minister “of the sanctuary, and of the true Tabernacle....” (Hebrews 9:1-2).

It is called the Temple in 1 Samuel 3:3 and 1 Samuel 1:9. The reason for this is that those who were faithful to the Tabernacle, would be in the everlasting Temple of heaven. Thus, it could be seen from one perspective as a permanent place. Those faithful in the church also will spend eternity in heaven. Thus, from that perspective the church can be seen as a Temple.

It is called the House of the Lord in Exodus 34:26 and 1 Samuel 1:7 and 24. It is God’s house. He had it built and he inhabited it. The same is true of the church. Christ built it and God dwells with us.

It is called a Worldly Sanctuary in Hebrews 9:1. The Tabernacle was a figure of the spiritual Tabernacle. The church is not a physical building. It is a spiritual building.

It is called a Pavilion in Psalm 27:5. It was to be a place of safety and shelter from God's enemies. The Hebrew word can mean 'a lair' or a 'den.' Proverbs 29:25 says trust in the Lord is safety. Proverbs 18:10 says safety is in the Lord who is a strong tower.

It is called the Tabernacle of Shiloh in Psalm 78:60. Shiloh means 'tranquility.' The Tabernacle was a place of rest and quiet. Shiloh was the first place of established residence for the Tabernacle in the Promised Land. Christ is the place of rest for the Christian. Matthew 11:29, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

This is the first article on the Tabernacle Shadows. It is hoped that this one and future ones will help us to see the many, many shadows and figures associated with the Tabernacle.

Preparing Yourself to Conduct Bible Studies

by James Sims Sr.

Part One: Building Your Foundation

Sitting on the porch swing one morning in Asheville, North Carolina, my Aunt Ida told me that I would be a gospel preacher. She had such high hopes for me. I told her I wasn't smart enough to be a preacher. She said "You can do it," and told me to pray about it. Every morning when I left the porch, she would say, "Keep looking up." That has always stuck with me. Other than Aunt Ida, no one really pushed or encouraged me to go into the ministry. Sometimes I wish that someone had. Maybe I would have started preaching earlier. If you see this desire in a young man, or have a chance to work with the youth, encourage them to be the leaders of tomorrow's church (as preachers or elders). The decisions they make now in their life will have an impact on their future ability to serve the church. Understand that I am not saying you have to be a preacher to have Bible studies. As Christians we are told to spread the gospel, seeking and saving the lost as Christ did. Also, spend time in prayer. Pray about everything. Pray for God to help you when you lead a Bible study and He will be your guide.

Even though as a little boy I wanted to play with others, I would spend the time daily with Aunt Ida struggling with the morning teachings and quizzes, trying to remember verses, the Ten Commandments and names in God's Word. Being a little boy, the main reason it was hard for me to learn or comprehend was because we were using the King James Bible, with all the thee's and thou's on the pages. Aunt Ida would read to me and help me to memorize scriptures by saying the verses from the Bible and having me repeat them. She was a patient and loving woman. She never knew that I did go on to preach the gospel—as she passed away before I started. To this day I thank her for it.

Studying daily will give you confidence in being able to teach others. Studying the Bible helped me to have the answers for those that have questions. When someone asks a question, it is important that you give them the right answer (don't give them an 'I think,' or a wrong answer. They will remember this). If you don't know the answer, take down their question and let them know you will research the answer in the Bible and get back to them. Make sure you get back to them with the truth. We are human, and we don't know or remember everything. That is why we have God's written Word. The Bible is there for us to use for this purpose.

We are human, and we don't know or remember everything. That is why we have God's written Word. The Bible is there for us to use...

I grew up in the church of Christ, having a very good support system from my physical family as well as my church family. There was always someone to take me to church, from parents to grandparents to aunts and uncles to friends. Once I was old enough, I made the commitment and made sure I was always in attendance and was an active Christian. Attending church, being with other Christians, and listening to the sermons and class lessons helped me to learn what the Bible teaches—as well as how to tell others.

I like to talk with others. If you aren't as comfortable doing this, being involved in the worship services is also a way to build your confidence. Saying prayers, waiting on the table and even doing a devotional or sermon will help you with this. If you are the one that schedules the duties of the service, encourage the Christian men that don't usually take a speaking part to do so. They will be nervous at first and may be short in their speaking but this is a way for them to learn. Let them know that you need them, and help them step out of their shell. The church always needs teachers for all ages. Help out by teaching a class. Not only will you gain Biblical knowledge but you will also have time to spend speaking to a class.

What Are People Looking For?

What are people looking for? What they want is the TRUTH! I knew a couple that had visited every denomination in town. After obeying the gospel by being immersed into Christ, they told me that the reason they finally obeyed the gospel was that I told the truth, that they could follow along in scripture with the teaching, and that I explained key words in the Greek text to help them understand. They heard the truth. Remind those that you are studying with that you are the messenger and not the originator of what you are teaching. You see, people today just want the message plain and simple. No need to sugar coat. The key is no matter what, teach the truth. Sometimes we might hold back on people in the world and give them a little time to learn. But you will have to step on some toes eventually. Do it out of love for their souls. Give them what they need, not what they want, and they will thank you for it.

Where Do You Find These People?

Where do you meet these people that need to hear the truth? Some are in your congregation. Just because someone is always in attendance doesn't mean they have obeyed the gospel. There are also visitors. Invite them to come to class or a get-together. Get to know them. At some point you can mention a Bible study with them. If you aren't comfortable leading a study join forces with the minister or someone else in the congregation. If a member is having a Bible study with someone, you can ask to sit in and learn from watching them. You come into contact with people all of the time in your daily activities. You spend time with friends. You have neighbors. People usually can tell that there is a difference about you from people of the world.

Something else to do is to add the word 'church' to your regular vocabulary. Whenever anyone asks about where you are going tell them you are going to church. This lets them know it is important to you and a priority in your life. This gives the opportunity for them to ask, 'What church do you go to?' This gives you the opportunity to tell them about the church. Your neighbors will notice your 'routine' of going to church also. When we eat out, we pray before the meal. Ask your waitress/waiter if there is something they need prayers for and include their request with your prayer. These are all opportunities to open up a Bible study with someone.

There are people at your work that are searching. When I worked in the secular world, any time I would first work with someone I would tell them that I am a Christian and if they have any questions feel free to ask. I would tell them that I will give them the answer from the Bible, not my opinion. There was a man who I worked with that was with me day after day for two years straight, eight to ten hours a day. One day he walked into services to listen. A few months later he obeyed the gospel. He told me, "I have been watching you for two years, through all the adversity we have been through at work in dealing with people and in things in your personal life. I waited to see what was going to happen, to see if you would fail, quit, or not walk the walk you were talking about (Christian) and you passed the test."

You see, be yourself! Let others see you and they will let their 'walls' down that have been put up by people claiming to tell the truth and the Word, but really giving man's opinions and ideas.

Listen when people speak. They will let you know where they are at, and from the words they use you can find a way to offer a Bible study. Remember that others are watching you to see if you 'walk the walk.' Realize the tremendous weight that something like that carries and what a powerful message you can give. I was in prison for a while—well, I worked at a State prison and before that I would kind of judge people by the outside: how they dressed, toys they had, money they had, etc. By working at the prison, I learned how to read the inmates hearts, meaning to look at the heart of man and not by what they wore, toys they had, or money they spent. I had many Bible studies while I was there and the inmates have plenty of time to be sure that what you are teaching is the truth. There were 13 immersions while I worked there. It helped me refine what God has been telling me all my life through His Word. 'Seek and save the lost,' no matter who they are. All need to hear the gospel. Don't make an assumption that they have already heard. Remember that most people have been exposed to some denomination and may have teachings from there that they think are gospel. Learn about what denominations teach so that you will be read to answer them with the truth.

Build your foundation to be able to approach people about having a Bible study. Know who you can call to help you with Bible studies, knowledge, and encouragement. Pray. Encourage. Study. Attend. Participate. Always tell the truth. Talk to everyone. Say 'church.' Be an example. Be yourself. Listen. Walk the walk. Look at people's hearts. Be what God wants you to be according to His Word.

The next article will cover ways to reach out to others to be able to teach them about salvation.

Hospitality Revisited

By Perry Hall

In the first act of hospitality, God invited Adam and Eve to live in His edenic world. Don't be like Adam and Eve. They weren't very good guests. They started eating without permission.

All of us have been guests; some of us might have even been victims! Once I ate Jamaican food (which I love) so hot it felt like there was a hole filled with burning coals in my tongue. I kept eating though because of Jesus: "When you enter any town, and they welcome you, eat the things set before you" (Luke 10:8 HCSB). Being a good guest was important to Jesus. No doubt some have experienced worse situations, like a friend of mine who ate rat in South America. He said it was good. I would say that reflected on his wife's cooking but that would not be hospitable.

Scriptures are plain in declaring hospitality important. The Holy Spirit commands it (Rom. 12:13; Heb. 13:2; 1 Pet. 4:9); elders and certain widows are qualified by it (1 Tim. 3:2, Tit. 1:8; 1 Tim. 5:10); and Christians will be judged eternally by it (Matt. 25:31-46). Even a cup of cold water is considered significant by Jesus (Matt. 10:42; Mark 9:41). Obviously if it is important to God, it is imperative to any well-meaning disciple.

The Meaning of Hospitality

Here is a list of three words in the Bible dealing with hospitality:

- Love of strangers - philoxenia
- Loving strangers - philoxenos
- Entertaining strangers – xenodocheō

The similarity between all three is "strangers." The difference is loving (philos) and entertaining, receiving, or welcoming (dechomai). Making welcome and feeling welcome are foundational thoughts of hospitality.

Let's revisit a familiar scene: visiting a strange congregation. The feelings can range from uncomfortable to fearful. It's uncomfortable for Christians because we are surrounded by people we don't know. It's fearful for those who have been rejected by so-called Christians when needed the most; or fearful that they will be rejected. Listening to the unloving language describing spiritual outliers such as homosexuals, transgenders, and such, makes me wonder if they would feel welcomed, even if they wanted to repent...or before we knew and they walked through our door.

*...when [visitors] "go" to us, make sure they know that they are a person whose coming is pleasing to us.

When a visitor walks into our assembly we often say a simple "welcome." Some congregations even have official greeters like Wal-Mart. But what does "welcome" mean? The etymology of the English word properly provides what we should be thinking and feeling: "a person whose coming is pleasing." Sadly Chick-fil-a is known more for people feeling welcome than some churches. Strangers can feel the "vibe" of the church often just by walking in and watching others. Visitors are a goldmine for growth because they are doing something too many Christians fail to do which is "go." We should go to them; but when they "go" to us, make sure they know they are a person whose coming is pleasing to us.

Considering how we treat visitors, would they feel welcomed in our homes after church? Afterwards, if we can't personally practice hospitality to these strangers, no matter their dress or lifestyle, then don't bother saying "Welcome;" because we won't really mean it.

What is our attitude towards strangers and theirs towards us? The most amazing aspect of Jesus' ministry is not that He loved the sinner while hating the sin; or loved those who hated Him. After all, we shouldn't really be amazed at anything Divinity can do because God is God and Jesus was God in the flesh. When I am amazed at God being God I am looking at him through my sinfulness. What amazes me the most about Jesus' ministry is how many immoral sinners loved Him—because He loved them. Understand, Jesus didn't have the cross – not yet – to say to the sinner, “See how much God loves you!” Jesus just had His life which said, “See how much God loves you!” Jesus' love for spiritual strangers was so great He welcomed them and they accepted His hospitality: And the Pharisees and scribes were complaining, “This man welcomes sinners and eats with them!” (Luke 15:2 HCSB)

What amazes me most about Jesus' ministry is how many immoral sinners loved Him—because He loved them.

I want to live that life! As we are seeing, hospitality is more than hanging around people who are like us and people we like. Hospitality is a serious topic, one which might be more challenging than we expect or are willing to hear and practice. Hospitality is a “strange” practice.

The Meaning of Hospitality - Going Deeper

In going deeper, hospitality is the gospel. Hospitality is grace. Hospitality is mercy. It is not a substitute for the gospel, or an aid in preaching the gospel, nor a bait and switch technique. It is simply one person loving another. Our hospitality is giving to others as a physical response to God's spiritual hospitality to us. This deeper meaning of charity in providing for the needs of strangers and society's forgotten is itself forgotten. The gospel is giving in love, as is hospitality. Paul uses the gospel as an illustration of the church collecting and contributing for poor saints: “For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ: Though He was rich, for your sake He became poor, so that by His poverty you might become rich” (2 Corinthians 8:9 HCSB).

As many words have changed meaning, so has hospitality. We have transformed it into something trendy instead of allowing hospitality to transform us into something godly. As is still done among social groups today, in the Greco-Roman world, hospitality was a way for the rich to keep up the appearances of being rich by spending time with the rich.

“Christian hospitality transformed Greco-Roman hospitality in its service to the needy rather than the rich. It was primarily the poor, widows, and traveling missionaries who received hospitality.”¹

Christianity transformed hospitality, but have we modern Christians transformed it into something less significant again? What is the biblical purpose of hospitality?

“We don't welcome the naked so they can be naked in our presence; we don't show hospitality to the hungry so they can watch us eat. We welcome the naked and hungry to change their circumstances. We make room for them so we can clothe and feed them. So too with moral hunger and personal shame. We don't welcome addicts so they can continue in their addiction. We make room for them, and take up residence in their lives, in order to be agents of ethical transformation. We don't receive the prostitute to help her get more tricks. We open our lives to the prostitute so we can deliver her from her slavery—to the pimp, perhaps to drugs, to poverty, to a destructive life. Hospitality is not universal approval. It is universal welcome for the sake of renewal. We make room not to tolerate but to transform.”²

Too often we have reduced hospitality to having friends over for food, fun, and “bored” games. All of this, plus potlucks and eating together at restaurants, are good and necessary for our spiritual family relationships; but barely touches the deeper meaning and purpose of hospitality. Christians eating together in the Bible was the true meaning of hospitality and had little to do with “get-togethers.” I would suggest that most of the times Christians ate together, the texts suggest the poorer were being fed by those richer.

“Hospitality, in the sense of the N.T. (Hebrews 13:2, 1 Peter 4:9), is not akin to ‘keeping company,’ or ‘open house’; it is a form of charity much needed by travelling, exiled, or persecuted Christians.”³

Maybe “hospitality” has lost its significance and meaning much like discipleship has, because both have become something easier than what they were originally. In fact, hospitality is discipleship. The very meaning of the word hospitality shows that something is amiss in the way it is often practiced today. If it means ‘love of strangers,’ then why are we inviting only our friends? And yet, if we have trouble spending time with friends; how even less effort is spent with “strangers”? If we have trouble sitting with the outliers who are Christians at potlucks; how much harder is it to even look at a homeless person in the eyes at an intersection and share from our prosperity with them? Can you see the problem? We have made hospitality about us! One of the most unselfish acts in Christianity has become self-serving.

We have made hospitality about us! One of the most unselfish acts in Christianity has become self-serving.

The greatest meal of “hospitality” is when we who were strangers are invited into God’s house to eat with His Son in His fellowship meal (1 Cor. 10:16). And wouldn’t you know it, Jesus initiated it with His apostles in a guest house (Mark 14:14; Luke 22:11). Hospitality is the gospel.

The Meaning of Hospitality – Even Deeper

Daniel Webster was out hunting one night, had traveled too far, and it was too late for him to head back to his cabin. He pounded on the door of a local farmhouse. All the lights were already out and the farmer was in bed. An upstairs window was raised and the farmer demanded, “What do you want?” Daniel Webster replied, “I want to spend the night here.” The farmer answered, “All right, stay there.” And down went the window.

While humorous, did your mind drift back to a certain parable of Jesus (Luke 11:5-13)? The point of the parable is not the importance of hospitality, but persistence in prayer. Yet my point is Jesus often uses hospitality as the background for his parables and our relationship to God: Two Debtors (Luke 7:36-50); Good Samaritan (Luke 10:25-37); Rude Guest (Luke 14:7-14); Great Banquet (Luke 14:15-24); Prodigal Son (Luke 15:11-32).

Did you notice something curious as you reflected on those parables? While not all parables involving hospitality are from Luke (i.e., Matt 25:31-46), all of these are. These parables parallel the many actions of hospitality within Luke (2:1-7; 4:38-39; 5:29-31; 6:1-5; 7:31-35; 7:36-50; 9:1-6; 9:10-16; 9:51-55; 10:1-12; 10:38-42; 11:37-53; 13:22-30; 14:12-14; 15:1; 15:19-31; 18:18-23; 19:1-10; 19:28-40; 22:7-13; 23:50-56). His account is known for emphasizing the humanity of Jesus and therefore humanitarian needs; such as the equal treatment of those whom society minimizes. In Jesus’ day that would have been the poor, Gentiles, sick, and women, among others. It is more than a narcissistic need within humans to be recognized; it is essential to our mental core. Being ignored, minimized, excluded, outcast and such is detrimental to our very humanity. Likewise, ignoring, minimizing, excluding, casting out and such is also detrimental to our very humanity. This makes the practice of hospitality that much more meaningful. It is a moral act and therefore the absence of it is immoral.

“In ancient times, hospitality was viewed as a pillar on which the moral structure of the world rested. It was a highly valued moral practice, seen as an important expression of kindness, mutual aid, neighborliness, and a response to the life of faith. Hospitality addressed the physical needs of strangers for food, shelter, and protection, but also included recognition of their worth and common humanity.”⁴

One of Luke’s examples of hospitality is Jesus being entertained by Mary and Martha (Luke 10:38-42). Martha welcomed (hupodechomai) Jesus into her home. Like xenodocheō (entertaining strangers), it too is related to dechomai or welcome. Commenting on this “welcome” (v. 38), Aaron Kuecker said,

“But the story must be read against the backdrop of Luke’s Gospel as a whole, where the work of hospitality (a vital form of generosity in the ancient Near East) is one of the chief signs of the in-breaking of God’s kingdom.”⁵

Jesus’ “in-breaking of God’s kingdom” began in a scene of hospitality, or better yet the lack of it. With Luke’s emphasis, it is no wonder his gospel is the only one which mentions there was no room in “the inn” for Jesus’ parents (Luke 2:7). The word inn is kataluma and can mean “inn,” but the only other two times it appears (Mark 14:14; Luke 22:11) it refers to a guest room. Kenneth Bailey gives it this meaning in “Jesus Through Middle Eastern Eyes” (chapter 1). Considering Luke’s emphasis on hospitality, it makes good sense for his story to begin with Jesus' parent's not being shown hospitality, even if it is simply a lack of room in the guest house. Hospitality is as essential to the gospel of Luke as hospitality is essential to the gospel-lived lives of Christians.

Another example of hospitality within Luke is Zacchaeus (19:1-9). Salvation through the gospel of Jesus is a theme of Luke, along with hospitality. In this scene we see these combined: "Today salvation has come to this house," Jesus told him, "because he too is a son of Abraham" (Luke 19:9 HCSB).

Luke even concludes with an act of hospitality on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24:13-35). Although invited by these two disappointed disciples, Jesus assumes the role of host and not guest by blessing and breaking the bread, then sharing it with His disciples. In this act they recognize Jesus. In our acts of hospitality, we will be blessed if strangers see in us Jesus.

In the very first act of hospitality Adam and Eve were bad guests. The rest of the Bible is spent with God inviting strangers to spiritually dine with Him because we too have followed in the footsteps of our forefathers. Salvation is an invitation of hospitable grace:

Isaiah 55:1 (HCSB) "Come, everyone who is thirsty, come to the waters; and you without money, come, buy, and eat! Come, buy wine and milk without money and without cost!"

Having revisited hospitality, and having received God's hospitality, let's visit with those who need our hospitality.

The Practical Atheist

By Gantt Carter

Psalm 14:1; 53:1

Do you believe in God? Do you believe God is real? If you answer "yes" to questions of that kind, then it is doubtful that you consider yourself to be an atheist. If you are a theist, then you are far from alone in this world. Atheists only comprise about 1 to 2 percent of the current world population.

You may consider yourself to be a theist in every way, but you might just be an atheist in a certain manner. Let me explain...

Some at least claim to believe in God or at least in a Creator of sorts, but they consider themselves to be "nonreligious." They do not believe the Bible or any writing to be from God, and they are not a part of any religious group or community. Obviously, that is a very basic way in which one is really a "practical atheist."

A practical atheist is someone who claims to believe in God and may truly assent mentally to the fact of His existence, but that truth has no real bearing on who they are or how they behave. The practical atheist lives as if God did not exist.

It is possible to believe in Deity intellectually but to not allow that belief to truly change the way that we live each day. One may even attend worship services on a frequent basis and believe in the truths revealed in the Bible. But sitting on a pew and agreeing with certain teachings does not inherently mean one is a real believer. For instance, can someone tell that we are a believer by merely observing the way we interact with others, and by noticing the daily behaviors we exhibit?

You may consider yourself to be a theist in every way, but you might just be an atheist in a certain manner.

We are reminded of the inspired words of James in the second chapter of his letter. He uses different illustrations and examples to demonstrate that faith without actions of obedience to God is ultimately useless. James writes, "But someone will say, 'You have faith and I have works.' Show me your faith apart from your works, and I will show you my faith by my works” (James 2:18).

The practical atheist lives as if God did not exist.

James goes on to observe that even the demons believe in God (James 2:19), or believe God is one. Many of the original Jewish recipients of the letter would have considered the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4) to be the most important truth in the world. But as James points out, the truth of the matter is that it is useless to even believe certain truths about God, if we do not follow through with submission to Him. The fact that one's theology is right does not mean that their life is right with Deity.

If you believe in God and His nature, then do you treasure Him with all of your being (see Deuteronomy 6:5)? Are you including His teachings in every arena of your life (see Deuteronomy 6:6-9)?

Many people appear to operate differently on at least two different levels. On one level they are theists who believe the Bible, and on another level they are atheists who live however they choose.

Paul David Tripp, makes the following observations in his book entitled “Awe”:

Each person has in some way, at street level, replaced awe of God with awe of something else. They have hooked the delight and satisfaction of their hearts to something other than God. The problem is that they don't know it, because this seldom happens at the formal theological, confessional level. They may have a theology of awe that puts God at the center, but between Sundays they live as if God doesn't exist, hoping to be wonder-struck by an experience of some created thing. They are hurt, angry, jealous, and frustrated, not just because life hasn't worked as they wished but because awe replacement has made that disappointment a more profoundly discouraging reality for them (Tripp, Paul David. “Awe Amnesia Always Leads to Awe Replacement.” Awe: Why It Matters in All We Think, Say and Do. Nottingham: InterVarsity, 2015. 60. Print.).

In the beginning of the 14th and 51st Psalms, David notes that the “fool has said in his heart, 'There is no God.'” The text translated in this fashion is quite fine and powerful, but there is an alternate translation of the Hebrew text. It is possible to translate it this way: “The fool has said in his heart, ‘No, God.’” The change reflects the thought that the person who tells God “no” (or the practical atheist) is the fool.

It would have been unthinkable for anyone in the time of David to be what we call an atheist today.

The force of the text, regardless of translation, is that of people who choose to ignore God. God has no place in their daily lives; they are unwilling to submit to His sovereign reign over the universe.

Yahweh, through the prophet Hosea, declared of His people: “My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because you have rejected knowledge, I reject you from being a priest to Me. And since you have forgotten the law of your God, I also will forget your children” (Hosea 4:6).

This author submits that the text could be translated as “My people are destroyed for a lack of acknowledgement” and “you have rejected knowing Me.” The problem was not actual intellectual ignorance, but they did not acknowledge their God and His will in the way they spoke and lived. They had intentionally kept the words of God from truly entering their hearts and actually transforming their behaviors. As Peter would put it, they “were willfully ignorant” or “deliberately overlooking” (2 Peter 3:5).

In our current age, some Christians think and say, “It does not really matter what you believe in religion as long as you are sincere.” But that approach is far more atheist in nature than Biblical (cf. Acts 23:1; 26:9-11; and Romans 10:1-3). Most atheists maintain that right and wrong is not an absolute, and that the only thing that really matters in life is being sincere. Most atheists also claim that it really does not matter what you believe or how you behave, just so long as you are sincere in so doing.

So let us trust and obey Deity each day. May we strive to live each day with God and His will in the forefront of our hearts. We must not shape our Christianity but allow Christianity as revealed in Holy Writ to shape us into the image of God's Son (Romans 8:29). Jesus died to provide forgiveness of sins, but that only occurs within His covenant, and living the covenant lifestyle is essential. Jesus died to forgive us, yes, but also to transform us!

Review by William Howard

No one goes home intact. PTSD sees to that. Decades pass after the soldier leaves the battlefield but the war stays inside him, kept there by PTSD—Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder. This disorder extracts heavy emotional currency leading to self-destruction. Those in war find a place of continuous death, terror and dehumanization. They witness some of the worst of all human experiences on the earth. As one Vietnam veteran said, “Anyone who has been an active participant in a combat situation cannot avoid being changed forever.”

Warfare barter in lasting harm, the fallout is unavoidable. Survivors must piece together shreds of devastated emotions mixed with the inexplicable guilt of surviving. The damage is profound, overshadowing lives of combat veterans. Who can defeat an enemy manifesting tragedy from within? It spills out misery on men, women, and families and will continue relentlessly. Soldiers leave the war but pay the cost the rest of their lives.

The combat veteran returns to civilian life locking away the anguish, pretending all is well. But the contents held in that internal pressure-cooker escape in multiple forms: isolation, rage, drugs, divorces, unemployment, hypervigilance, depression, and suicidal tendencies. The Veterans Administration considers PTSD incurable — a paroxysm that does not age well — occupying all time, demanding all thought. Life is engulfed. This is the thousand pound presence that must be managed.

My Thorn in The Flesh: A Vietnam Veteran Speaks about PTSD and The Bible is a book written by Bobby D. Gayton. He survived Vietnam, but the overload of trauma never left him. He was present during the Tet Offensive, the Battle of Ap Cho and the Battle of Soui Cut. Private Gayton writes of these events in the humble words of an infantryman in the mud. That is who he is. He did not see the history, the greatness, or the glory, but only the horror and relentless consumption of lives. The experience was only a matter of moments inside a year, but brought a lifelong burden.

Bobby Gayton spends his life overcoming PTSD. This book is his story chronicling his problem and the attempts of maintaining life under a controlling condition. He understands PTSD — he knows the thorn afflicting him. His words are not academic bombast but grounded and unpretentious. He is connected with the subject and experienced. This book is part memoir, part Bible study, and part sharing session to fellow sufferers. Sufferers do not have to be veterans. Any trauma victim can benefit from this book.

This is a unique book. As far as I am aware, there is none like it in the brotherhood.

There is more to him. Bobby Gayton is a preacher. He can give something rare and I believe providential. The combination of combat veteran and evangelist places him in a perfect station. He trusts God. If the Bible has the solution to all problems then it will have the answer to PTSD — not by name but by principle. Help is promised to all who seek it, and I appreciate his single-minded commitment. By diligence and despair he searched the Bible. His level of motivation is high. He spent the years necessary to consider the subject, collect relevant scriptures and organize his findings.

The book begins with a short intro of Bobby Gayton's life before Vietnam. After high school he joined the Army and at nineteen was soon in a war on the other side of the world. Chapter one relates the brutal environment he survived and the source of his PTSD. He kept a journal and narrates his experience through selected dates in his notes from Vietnam. About thirty-nine relevant events are enough to convey what transpired. In each entry he records the occurrences in matter-of-fact language. He may list all who died one day and the loss of friends. Other times he records battles that would be major points in the war. He writes as a man who witnessed catastrophe, survived, and is too occupied with a war to grieve.

He was able to complete his tour and go home alive. But he did not leave Vietnam unharmed. The rest of the book is given to examining and resolving problems brought back from the war. "I kept focusing on the problem that I was having with my irrational belief system instead of focusing on the knowledge that I had obtained from studying the Bible. My faulty thinking had put me in despair." Chapter by chapter the book systematically examines biblical solutions to symptoms of PTSD. There are mental and emotional states we cannot readily comprehend without experiencing them (PTSD is but one). The message of "just get over it" is not helpful and may not be possible. Kindness goes a long way. Sufferers do not need a sermon from an ivory tower. They need someone who empathizes, digs deep into scripture, and encourages. Bobby Gayton does that.

The question is: does the book reach its goal? According to my interviews with men suffering from PTSD it does. Potentially, it can benefit anyone emotionally shattered. For the rest of us this book is a resource to understanding the traumatized mind. Can the book be improved? I don't know how the subject could be covered more personally. That would take someone with matching background and diligence of the author. Could it be improved in form? Yes. Considering the significance of the book, however, this is a minor issue.

I interviewed several people to have a better understanding [of how people react to this book] ... To those with PTSD, there is a different response: they weep; they lose sleep, and are overwhelmed... The combat veterans all say, "I was reading about me."

I have met Bobby Gayton. I have interviewed him. He is a humble and conscientious man. To be fair to all (author and potential readers), I must mention anything lacking in the book. This does not make friends, but here goes: there is too much help given in parentheses. Once something has been introduced and explained properly it does not have to be spelled out every time it is mentioned. Repeated clarifications are needless. The reader gets it. The subject is not that technical. While the author tends to be overly helpful this does not diminish the purpose or the effectiveness of the book. One reader said, "He is not a professional writer, but his heart shines through." There is the difference that crafted writing alone cannot make. While I am critical in this small matter, I will concede that repetition may be necessary for sharpening a critical point for a particular audience — obviously, I am not that audience. What is meaningless to one is medicine to another. The reader's reaction to this book depends on who the reader is.

This is a unique book. As far as I am aware there is none like it in the brotherhood. Writing this book was therapeutic for Bobby Gayton. What it will be for you depends on who you are. I interviewed several people to have a better understanding. All had read the book. For us who do not have PTSD, it is information we can use and offer as help to other people. We can read it, put it down, and start another book. To those with PTSD there is different response: they weep; they lose sleep, and are overwhelmed. The author strikes a profound chord where it is needed. Is this helpful? According to PTSD sufferers it is. This book can help manage what appears unmanageable. It proves that God provides solutions where there seems to be no hope. The sufferer can know there is powerful help and he is not the first nor is he alone with PTSD. Bobby Gayton describes his life confined by trauma, but the combat veterans all say, “I was reading about me.”

What was Paul's "Thorn in the Flesh"?

This is one of the most common questions that people ask. It's often used as an example of what people call "unimportant questions." But everything in the Bible is important. There's no such thing as an "unimportant question" from the Bible.

Before we go on, it's important that you come to this with an open mind and an open Bible. A lot of people say "no one knows what the thorn in the flesh is." Others say, "It's probably bad eyesight, but no one knows for sure." We're not concerned with what people have to say about it. We're only interested in what the Bible has to say about it. So, open your Bible and let's discover the answer for ourselves.

The "thorn in the flesh" is described in Second Corinthians 12:7-9. Please notice how Paul describes it:

1. It is something physical (a thorn in the flesh).
2. It is the "messenger of Satan."
3. Its purpose is to beat Paul (buffet, in King James, which literally means to hit or strike repeatedly. This indicates violence).
4. It humbled Paul.
5. It didn't go away, even after Paul prayed about it.
6. Paul calls it "my infirmities."

Now, look back a chapter and let's see what the context tells us. In chapter eleven, Paul is dealing with the Jews who were trying to undermine his efforts for Christ. They were Jews who tried to take people away from Christ and back to the Law of Moses. Look what Paul says about them and their work against him.

1. These Jews brought physical persecution (11:24-26, 32-33).
2. These Jews are called "messengers" of Satan (11:13-15).
3. These Jews attacked Paul with violence (11:24-26, 32-33).
4. These persecutions kept Paul from exalting himself (11:30).
5. These persecutions didn't go away, even after Paul prayed about them (see the book of Acts).
6. These persecutions from the Jews were called "my infirmities" (11:30, 12:5).

If you notice, everything that was said about Paul's thorn in the flesh was said about the persecution Paul endured from the Jews—just one chapter earlier.

Based on the evidence and the context, Paul's "thorn in the flesh" was the continual persecution from the Jews who were trying to destroy Paul and the message of the gospel.

WHO AM I?

(Questions from the Book of Esther)

1. I am a Jew who covered myself with itchy cloth and burnt stuff. Who am I? _____
2. I am a very powerful man, the ruler over the Persian Empire, and some people know me as Xerxes. Who am I? _____
3. I really don't like the Jews...especially Mordecai. In fact, I wish they'd all just die. I've got a plan to make that happen, and it'll work fine, so long as no one gets in my way. Who am I? _____
4. I am a Jew whose parents died. But I was raised by a kind relative who is like a father to me. He told me to try to save my people by talking to the king. Who am I? _____
5. I built a really tall gallows to hang Mordecai from. Unfortunately, they put me there instead, and now I'm dead. Who am I? _____
6. I overheard a plot to kill the king, and by making it known, I saved the king's life. It's been a while, but now he wants to thank me for my service. Who am I? _____
7. I am the queen who pointed out that Haman was trying to kill my people. He wasn't too happy about it. Who am I? _____

About the Authors

Jamie Beller has been a preacher in Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and South Carolina. He presently works with the church of Christ in Prague, Oklahoma, while also working full-time at Tinker Air Force Base. He loves discussing the Bible with friends and strangers alike.

Gantt Carter is married to the former Julie Jonhson. They have two young children and reside in Elk City, OK. He has been preaching for about a decade, and he is currently the preaching servant for the 2nd & Adams congregation in Elk City. He enjoys fishing, martial arts, and spending time with his family and friends. Gantt delights in God and in studying the Word of God. His greatest desire is to glorify God with his life and to encourage others to do the same.

Gerald Cowan has been preaching the gospel for over 50 years. In addition to many mission trips to Albania, he has also taught in the British Bible School, and has spent the past 2 ½ decades working for the Lord in Southern Illinois. He has an email publication (Gerald Cowan's Personal Periodical) that he sends out for free to all who are interested.

Kyle Frank is a Christian, Restoration Movement enthusiast, and book lover. His writings have appeared in Gospel Light as well as Faith and Facts Quarterly. He has edited a three-volume set of the Life and Letters of Jacob Creath Jr., two volumes on Elder Benjamin Franklin, the autobiography of Daniel Sommer, as well as compiling The Lost Sermons of H. Leo Boles.

Perry Hall has been preaching over 30 years, with a degree in History and Philosophy. He has been married since 1984, and has 4 children. He says, "We have two who are adopted and two we got the old fashioned way. I mention this to encourage adoption (Jms.1:27) - Moses and Jesus were adopted. Two of my children are black and racial harmony is a real-life concern of mine. My parents now have 10 out of 16 grandchildren not biologically related to them. As for a hobby I like motorcycles because you can't fit a wife and 4 children on a motorcycle."

Bill Howard has been serving the Lord for more than half a century, preaching in small congregations, and presently serving as an elder in Dale, Oklahoma. He has written two books to aid new converts in Christian growth: Believest Thou This, and Whom Seek Ye? He has also written a series of detective novels (Rick Wade: Investigations), set in the 1950s/60s, which he is proud to say are good, clean, old-fashioned detective stories without filth (see pages 19 and 38 for more on these books).

William Howard lives with his family in Dacula, Georgia. He spends much of his time absorbed in books arbitrarily chosen. Currently he is reading The Complete Folk and Fairy Tales of the Brothers Grimm, The Making of the American Essay, and Terry and the Pirates 1934 to 1936. William enjoys writing while eating sushi – but that was expensive so he had to stop. He walks in the woods, composes jazz and preaches on Sunday.

Joseph McWhorter is an Alabama native turned Texan. He is a graduate of the Southwest School of Biblical Studies in Austin, and preaches for the Canyon Lake church of Christ. He and his wife, Michelle, are currently raising two dogs, multiple chickens, and the occasional stray cat.

Mark McWhorter is a former medical professional, a research fanatic and history nut, a missionary, a book-seller (with his wife, Teah), and that doesn't even come close to all that he does. He has written for several brotherhood periodicals, spoken on several lectureships, helped present Restoration Movement seminars, and was integral in starting Roundhouse, an annual gathering of members of the church who homeschool.

Jim Mitchell obtained his Bachelor of Arts from Freed-Hardeman University & Master of Divinity from Oklahoma Christian University, and has been preaching for more than 35 years and has worked with congregations in Florida, Virginia, and Oklahoma. He served as the minister for the church of Christ in Harrah, OK, from 2006 to 2014 and is now the pulpit minister for the Cherokee Hills church of Christ in Oklahoma City.

Roderick Ross, better known as “Rod,” has been married for 42 years to (he believes) the most wonderful, caring woman on the earth (as well as the best cook), with three grown children (married), and nine grand-children from ages 1-14. A lover of baseball, Ohio State football, hunting, fishing, Roy Rogers movies, and American history. As his youngest son once said, “You know everything nobody wants to know, and everything nobody cares about.” He suffered a stroke in 2011, which left him legally blind, unable to drive, read and work; but, he still believes that everyone should do what they can. He maintains a website, three Facebook groups, three Facebook pages, sends out an email lesson Monday – Friday, teaches Bible class, preaches every Sunday morning and evening, and does a weekly radio program. He does each of these in small time frames, followed by power naps.

Jake Schotter (17 years old) is an aspiring preacher in Goodyear, Arizona. He loves studying the Bible, reading books, preaching, and writing about the Truth. He has been preaching since 2009. He has been very fortunate to be able to grow his library to over 2,500 books and loves ordering them for cheap prices. He currently attends West Valley church of Christ and can be contacted at jakeschotter@gmail.com. He is planning to attend Freed-

Hardeman University in a couple of years, after he graduates from high school.

Devin Self is a member of the Gravel Hill Church of Christ in Dover, Arkansas. From a very young age he knew he wanted to serve the Lord. Going to church camps, youth devotionals, and vacation bible schools were part of his favorite childhood memories, as well as the many great influences that kept him growing stronger. He is married to his wonderful wife of 2 years, Kelsey, and they hope someday to have children to be raised up with Christ as their foundation.

James Sims excels at working with small congregations, and building them up in the faith. He has worked with congregations in Nevada and Florida (currently working with the church in Floral City, FL), and has much practical experience in reaching the lost for the Lord.

Bradley Cobb is the author of several books, including The Holy Spirit in the Book of Acts and the upcoming Who Were the Apostles?, commentaries on Habakkuk, Philemon, James, and Jude, as well as two children’s books. He is also a preacher, editor, artist, musician, Restoration Movement enthusiast and nerd. He is married to his best friend, Jesse, and they have four Christian children.

The Life of Elder Raccoon John Smith

The Life of Elder Raccoon John Smith

by John Augustus Williams

The Life of Elder Raccoon John Smith

A brand-new, completely reformatted, annotated, and corrected edition of the classic biography of the most powerful Gospel preacher in Kentucky.

A tale of excitement, of sadness, of humor, and of triumph. John Smith was truly a unique individual, whose career for God is one that must be read to be believed! Attacked by denominational foes, rejected by friends, this backwoods preacher captured the hearts and minds of the common people, and helped spread the true word of God—without denominational creeds and doctrines—throughout the Bluegrass State.

Origin of the Disciples of Christ

Two books in one!

Origin of the Disciples of Christ by William H. Whitsitt, written to “prove” that the Disciples of Christ of the 1800s was an off-shoot of the Sademanians, Scotch Baptists, and Haldane movements—and therefore heretical.

Origin of the Disciples of Christ by George W. Longan, refuting and exposing Whitsitt’s book for what it really is: a historically inaccurate, dishonest work that even Whitsitt’s fellow Baptists were embarrassed by.

Paperback: $10.95; Digital edition FREE

Recollections of Men of Faith* (by W.C. Rogers)

This is a unique book, without a doubt, for it is comprised of stories, anecdotes, and experiences that the author heard (or was involved in) from the men themselves. Chapters giving anecdotes with Alexander Campbell, Jacob Creath Jr., Aylett Raines, John T. Johnson, John N. Mulkey, and more. Also contains the autobiography of John Rogers, who (along with Barton W. Stone) represented the Christians in the union meeting of 1832 with the Reformers.

Paperback: $10.95, Digital edition $2.99

A History of the Disciples of Christ in America* (by B.B. Tyler)

A book-length encyclopedic history of the Restoration Movement, which was originally part of the “Religion in America” series of books in the early 1900s.

This book contains chapters on the Great Revival, Preparatory Events in Europe, The Campbells in America, Connection with the Baptists, the Problem of Christian Union, the Creed Question, Literature and Education, and Missions.

Paperback: $9.95

Digital edition: FREE

The Dawn of the Reformation in Missouri* (by T.P. Haley)

A detailed history of the men who first brought the true gospel to Missouri, along with many stories and anecdotes of their work.

Contains several pictures of these pioneer preachers.

Paperback, 340 pages, $13.95

Digital Edition: $3.99

The Life and Work of R.C. Barrow

One present-day gospel preacher said “This book should be required reading for all Christians.” If you don’t come away encouraged by what R.C. Barrow went through and endured, then you might want to check your pulse.

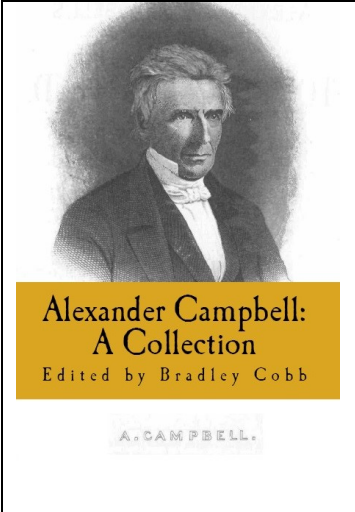

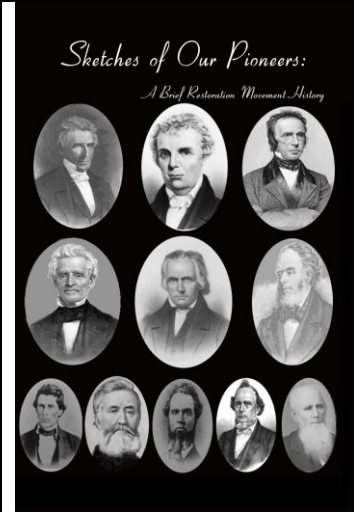

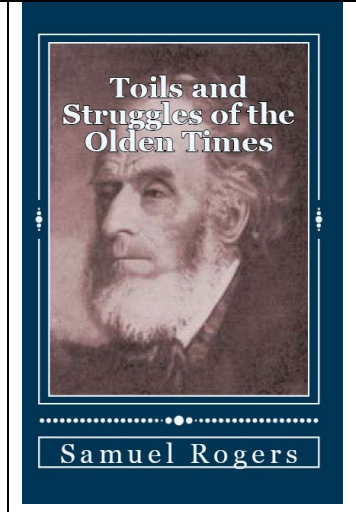

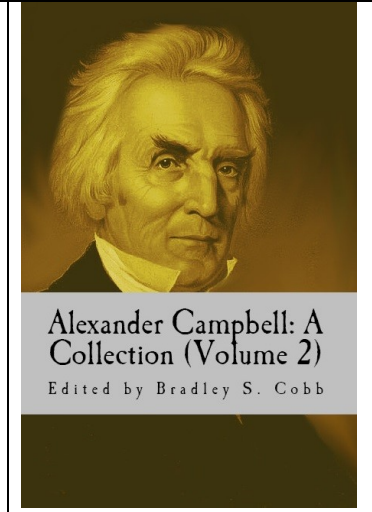

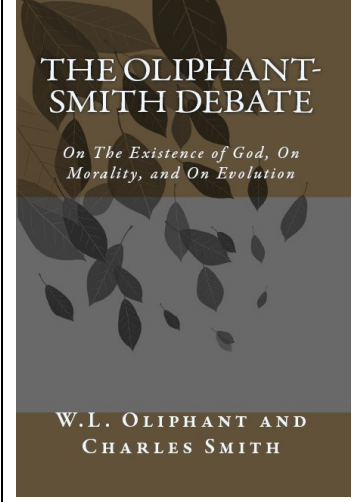

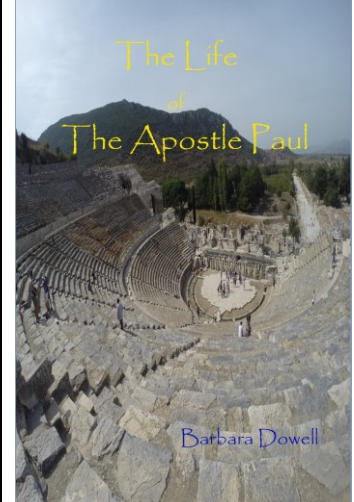

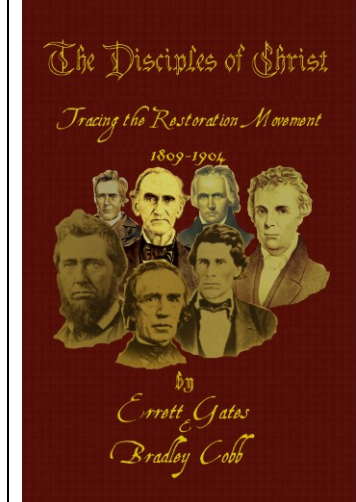

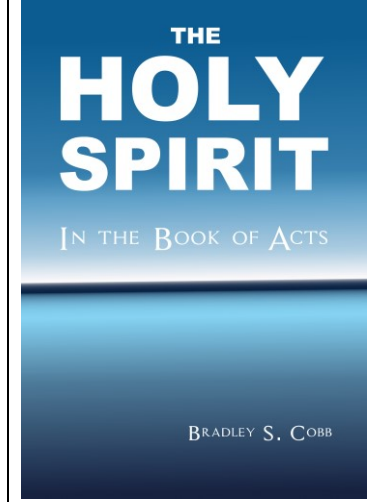

Contains the biography/autobiography of R.C. Barrow, compiled by his son, including several articles that R.C. Barrow submitted as reports of his work to brotherhood periodicals.

There is also a somewhat autobiographical novel included, called “Our Cause in Chicory,” written by Barrow, along with one of his own sermons.

Paperback: $10.95

Digital edition: $3.99
